

J&D Tree Service Expands Tree Removal Service for Hazardous and Diseased Trees

August 31, 2026

MONETT, MO - August 31, 2026 -

J&D Tree Service, a locally owned tree care company serving Southwest Missouri, has formally expanded its tree removal service to address hazardous, dead, diseased, and unwanted trees of any size. The expanded service places particular emphasis on complex jobs involving large hardwoods positioned near structures, power lines, and utilities, where careful planning is essential to protect surrounding property.

Every removal project now begins with an on-site inspection, during which crews evaluate tree condition, surrounding obstacles, and access points to determine the safest method of removal. This step allows the team to plan an approach tailored to each property before any work begins. Jobs are completed with full insurance protection, professional-grade equipment, and thorough cleanup once the tree has been taken down.

Founded by John Marmon, the company has more than 20 years of experience and has completed over 500 projects while maintaining a claims-free safety record. That track record underscores the emphasis placed on Careful preparation and safe execution across the region, which includes Barry, Lawrence, and Stone counties along with surrounding communities such as Monett, Cassville, Aurora, and Mount Vernon.

"Removing a large tree near a home or power line is not a task that should be rushed," said John Marmon, owner of J&D Tree Service. "The on-site inspection gives the crew the information needed to plan each cut and protect everything around the tree. That preparation is the reason the company has stayed claims-free across more than 500 jobs."

As part of the expanded service, the company provides free on-site estimates for all tree removal work. Crews can also help homeowners determine whether a permit is required before removal proceeds. Most private residential removals do not require a permit, though trees located near utility lines, within a city right-of-way, or on commercial property may need approval before work can begin.

"Homeowners often are unsure whether a permit applies to their situation, and the answer depends on where the tree is located," Marmon said. "Helping property owners understand those requirements up front removes a common source of confusion and keeps every project on solid footing."

The expansion reflects continued demand across Southwest Missouri for safe handling of trees that pose a risk to homes, businesses, and public infrastructure. Dead or diseased trees, in particular, can become unstable over time, and removal near structures or utilities calls for specialized equipment and trained crews.

Beyond J&D Tree Service Tree Removal, the company offers professional pruning and trimming to improve tree structure and longevity, as well as stump grinding to eliminate tripping hazards and prepare yards for new landscaping. The company also maintains 24-hour availability for urgent tree-related hazards following severe weather.

J&D Tree Service is a locally owned and operated company based in Monett, Missouri, serving homeowners and property managers throughout Barry, Lawrence, Stone, and surrounding counties. The company is licensed and insured, offers free estimates, and has built its reputation on skilled, honest, and professional service across Southwest Missouri.
