S-Line Contractors, a licensed pipeline and underground utility contractor based in Southern California, has introduced an expanded suite of infrastructure capabilities covering water, gas, storm drainage, electrical conduit, telecommunications, and fiber pipeline systems for commercial and industrial clients throughout the region.

The expanded offering brings together the installation, upgrade, repair, and coordination of essential underground infrastructure under a single licensed contractor. The scope is designed to serve developers, property owners, general contractors, and industrial operators who require multiple utility trades coordinated within a single project. The capabilities span water and gas lines, storm drain systems, electrical conduit, and telecommunications and fiber pathways.

S-Line Contractors holds several state classifications that support this broader scope, including a C-34 Pipeline Contractor license, a Class B General Building Contractor license, and a C-10 Electrical Contractor license. These classifications allow the company to manage construction projects involving multiple trades, site work, building improvements, and related coordination without requiring clients to engage separate specialty contractors for each utility discipline.

"Underground infrastructure is often the most complex part of a commercial project, and it rarely involves just one utility," said Fahed EL. Bitar of S-Line Contractors. "Bringing water, gas, storm drainage, electrical conduit, telecommunications, and fiber capabilities together under one licensed contractor removes coordination gaps that can slow a project down and helps keep timelines and scopes aligned."

The company reports that combining pipeline work with general building and electrical classifications addresses a common challenge for developers and general contractors, who frequently must coordinate multiple specialty firms to complete underground systems. By managing these disciplines internally, the company aims to reduce the number of separate contracts and handoffs required on a given site.

S-Line Contractors provides services across Los Angeles County, Riverside County, Orange County, and San Bernardino County. The company has completed more than 100 projects and has received multiple industry awards for its work. Its client base includes commercial, industrial, retail, hospitality, health and aged care, civil works, and government sectors across Southern California.

"Clients increasingly expect a single point of accountability for underground utility work," EL. Bitar added. "The combined licensing allows the team to take responsibility for a full range of pipeline and utility systems, from the initial installation through repair and upgrades over the life of a facility."

The expanded capabilities reflect a broader focus within the construction industry on integrated project delivery, where owners seek to consolidate specialty trades and reduce the administrative burden of managing multiple subcontractors. Pipeline and utility coordination is a frequent source of delays on commercial sites, particularly when multiple systems share the same underground corridors.

S-Line Contractors is a commercial construction and pipeline contracting company headquartered in Riverside, California. The company delivers pipeline and underground utility solutions alongside general building and electrical services for clients throughout Southern California. Guided by core values that include safety, integrity, craftsmanship, collaboration, innovation, and community building, the firm serves a diverse range of commercial, industrial, institutional, and government clients across Los Angeles, Riverside, Orange, and San Bernardino counties.
