

Danville Music Highlights Private Lessons and Band Instrument Rentals for Back-to-School Season

September 23, 2026

Danville, California - September 23, 2026 -

As Tri-Valley students return to classrooms and school music programs, Danville Music is directing attention to its private lesson offerings, which span guitar, piano, and a full range of band and orchestral instruments taught by working musicians. The full-service musical instrument store, lesson studio, and repair shop in Danville, California has structured its instruction around active performers who bring current, real-world experience to each student.

Founded in 1989 and located at 115 Town and Country Drive, Suite E, Danville Music serves families across the Tri-Valley region, including Danville, San Ramon, Walnut Creek, and Pleasanton. Its lesson program pairs beginning and advanced students with instructors who continue to perform professionally, an approach the store credits with keeping instruction grounded in practical technique and repertoire.

"Learning from someone who is still playing gigs and sessions makes a difference in how students progress," said Adam Schuman, co-owner of Danville Music. "When an instructor can connect a scale or a chord voicing to the way it is actually used on stage, the lessons stay relevant and students stay motivated. That connection between the classroom and live music is at the center of the program."

The timing coincides with the start of the school year, when many students take up an instrument for the first time or continue study in a school band or orchestra. Alongside private instruction, Danville Music supports school music programs throughout the Tri-Valley with band and orchestra instrument rentals, offering the full Yamaha line on both a rent and buy basis to accommodate students at different stages.

The store also maintains an in-house repair department staffed by experienced luthiers. Instruments purchased from the store carry free lifetime adjustments, and the repair team services a broad range of stringed, band, and orchestral instruments for players across the surrounding communities.

Schuman noted that the combination of instruction, rentals, and on-site repair is intended to give families a single resource as they navigate the school year. "A student who starts lessons in September will often need an instrument setup, a rental option, and someone to answer questions along the way," he said. "Having those services under one roof at our Danville, California location, with details available at danvillemusic.com, is meant to make that first year less complicated for parents and students alike."

Private lessons at the store cover guitar, piano, and band and orchestral instruments, with scheduling arranged around the school calendar. Instruction is available to students of varying ages and experience levels, from those beginning their first instrument to more advanced players preparing for ensemble participation.

Danville Music is a full-service musical instrument retailer, lesson studio, and repair shop in the San Francisco Bay Area, owned by Adam Schuman and Cameron Brochier. The store offers Danville Music guitars and gear including electric and acoustic guitars, basses, amplifiers, effects, drums, ukuleles, microphones, and band and orchestra instruments, along with accessories from a wide selection of brands. In addition to sales, the store provides instrument rentals, private lessons, and repair services for musicians throughout the Tri-Valley and surrounding areas.
