Easterling Family Law Expands Its Family Legal Services to Indian Trail

September 22, 2026

Matthews, North Carolina - September 22, 2026 -
Easterling Family Law, PLLC has expanded its family law and divorce representation services to serve residents throughout Indian Trail, North Carolina. The move extends the firm's reach across Union County, giving individuals and families in one of the region's fastest-growing towns greater access to legal counsel in divorce, child custody, alimony, and property division matters.

The expansion responds to steady population growth in Indian Trail and the surrounding communities of Union County, where demand for local family law representation has increased in recent years. Residents who once traveled outside the area for divorce and custody matters now have closer access to attorneys familiar with the local courts and community.

Easterling Family Law provides representation across a full range of family law areas, including separation, divorce, child custody and support, alimony, mediation, property and asset division, and domestic violence matters. The firm structures each case around the specific circumstances of the client, whether the matter involves complex assets, contested custody, or resolution through mediation.

"Families in Indian Trail deserve legal representation that understands both the law and the community they live in," said Lindsey Easterling, founding attorney at Easterling Family Law. "Extending services to this part of Union County means residents can work with attorneys who know the local courts and can guide them through difficult transitions with clarity and care."

The firm emphasizes a client-first approach that pairs courtroom experience with attention to the personal circumstances behind each case. Its legal team includes Lindsey Easterling, Kathryn Yates, Debra McDuffie, Kristen Bens, and Tandi Gerow, who together handle matters ranging from straightforward separations to contested custody disputes.

Indian Trail, located in Union County, has seen continued residential growth, drawing families to its neighborhoods, schools, and recreational amenities. As the town expands, the availability of nearby family law services addresses a practical need for residents facing sensitive legal circumstances.

"Divorce and custody cases carry emotional weight in addition to legal complexity," Easterling said. "The focus of the practice remains on helping people reach stable outcomes while protecting what matters most to them, particularly their children and their financial security."

Through its work with Easterling Family Law in Indian Trail, the firm aims to reduce the distance and difficulty many families experience when seeking qualified representation during separation and divorce. Local familiarity with Union County courts allows the legal team to anticipate procedural considerations and advocate effectively on behalf of clients.

Easterling Family Law is a family law firm based in Matthews, North Carolina, serving clients throughout Union County, including Indian Trail. The firm concentrates its practice on separation, divorce, child custody and support, alimony, mediation, property and asset division, and domestic violence matters. Guided by a commitment to compassionate counsel and strong advocacy, the firm provides tailored representation designed to meet the individual needs of each client and family it serves.
