Laurelwood Pediatrics Announces Comprehensive Newborn Care Services

August 20, 2026

MEMPHIS, TN - August 20, 2026 -
Laurelwood Pediatrics has announced an expansion of its newborn care services in Memphis, Tennessee, responding to continued interest in specialized medical support for infants during the earliest stages of life. The expanded offerings are intended to provide families with access to pediatric care focused on newborn health, development, preventive services, and parental education.

The announcement comes as pediatric healthcare providers continue to emphasize the importance of medical attention during the first months of a child's life. Newborns undergo rapid physical and developmental changes during this period, making regular health assessments important for identifying concerns at an early stage. Families seeking a newborn pediatrician in Memphis, TN can now access a broader range of services through Laurelwood Pediatrics.

The expanded care program includes routine newborn examinations, growth monitoring, developmental assessments, and recommended immunizations. Pediatric visits can also address common concerns affecting newborns, including feeding difficulties, jaundice, sleep-related issues, and other conditions that may require medical observation or intervention. By incorporating these services into regular pediatric appointments, the clinic is placing greater emphasis on early identification and preventive care.

Laurelwood Pediatrics has also expanded its approach to newborn screenings and ongoing assessments. Medical professionals evaluate an infant's physical development while monitoring changes in weight, feeding patterns, and other indicators of early health. These evaluations can provide parents with timely information about their child's development and help identify situations that may warrant additional medical attention.

Parent education is another component of the expanded program. Laurelwood Pediatrics provides educational materials addressing practical aspects of newborn care, including breastfeeding, sleep routines, nutrition, and recognizing symptoms that may require consultation with a healthcare provider. Workshops and informational resources are intended to give parents reliable information as they adjust to the responsibilities associated with caring for a newborn.

Dr. Emily Hawkins, a senior pediatrician at Laurelwood Pediatrics, said establishing communication between parents and healthcare providers is particularly important during the early months of a child's life.

?Our goal is to be a reliable partner in the health journey of Memphis families,? Hawkins said. ?By offering specialized newborn care, we ensure that parents have access to the support they need from day one. Our personalized approach allows us to address the specific concerns of each family.?

The clinic's announcement also highlights its focus on creating an accessible environment for families throughout Memphis. Flexible scheduling options are intended to accommodate parents managing work, childcare, and other responsibilities while maintaining regular pediatric appointments. The clinic has stated that it continues to focus on providing services that can meet the needs of families from a range of backgrounds.

Early pediatric care can play an important role in identifying health concerns before they become more significant. Regular visits also give parents opportunities to discuss feeding, sleep, development, vaccinations, and other questions that commonly arise during infancy. These conversations can help establish continuity of care as children progress beyond the newborn stage.

Laurelwood Pediatrics' expanded newborn services represent an effort to broaden access to pediatric resources for Memphis families. The initiative combines routine medical assessments with preventive care and educational support, reflecting the clinic's focus on addressing both infant health needs and parental concerns during an important period of childhood development.

Families interested in learning more about the expanded services or scheduling an appointment can contact Laurelwood Pediatrics directly. Parents seeking a newborn pediatrician in Memphis, TN can inquire about available newborn appointments, pediatric services, scheduling options, and educational resources offered by the clinic.
