All Pro CS Decks Extends Deck Installation Coverage to Brenham

October 06, 2026

COLLEGE STATION, TX - October 06, 2026 -
All Pro CS Decks has extended its deck design and installation services to Brenham, Texas, broadening the contractor's service area within Washington County and the surrounding Brazos Valley region. The expansion gives Brenham-area property owners direct access to a builder previously concentrated in the College Station and Bryan markets.

Brenham sits roughly 30 miles southeast of College Station along the U.S. Highway 290 corridor, placing it within reach of the company's established operations. The move formalizes coverage that responds to continued residential development and steady interest in outdoor living additions across central Texas. Property owners in the area can now request local project consultations for new construction and deck replacement work.

The expansion reflects a wider pattern of demand for custom outdoor structures in suburban and rural Texas communities. Direct service to Brenham allows the company to schedule site visits, measurements, and installations without the travel constraints that previously limited availability in Washington County. The change is intended to shorten lead times for residents who had faced longer waits or fewer local options.

"The addition of Brenham reflects steady interest from property owners in Washington County who wanted a local option for deck construction," said Hector Garcia, owner of All Pro CS Decks. "Serving the area directly makes it possible to manage timelines, material selection, and site conditions more closely for each project."

Washington County and the broader Brazos Valley have seen measured population growth over the past decade, a trend that has supported ongoing residential construction and remodeling activity. Brenham, the county seat, serves as a commercial hub for the surrounding area and draws homeowners seeking additions that extend usable outdoor space. The expanded service area places design and installation work within a shorter driving radius of those communities.

The company's base in the College Station and Bryan area positions crews to reach Brenham without the extended travel that can complicate scheduling for outlying projects. Consolidating coverage across the corridor is expected to allow more consistent appointment windows for site assessments and installation. Residents in nearby Washington County communities such as Chappell Hill and Burton also fall within the expanded reach.

Work offered in the newly covered area includes custom deck design, structural framing, and full installation using materials such as pressure-treated lumber, composite decking, and hardwood. The company also constructs covered decks, pergolas, and related outdoor features suited to the regional climate. Each project begins with an on-site assessment to determine layout, elevation, and load requirements before construction proceeds.

Composite decking and pressure-treated lumber remain common material choices in the region because both perform under the heat and humidity typical of central Texas summers. Material selection during the design phase accounts for maintenance expectations, budget, and the intended use of the finished structure. Framing, fastening, and finishing follow standard construction methods to support long-term durability.

Deck projects in the Brenham area fall under Texas building standards and, where applicable, local permitting requirements that govern railing height, footing depth, and structural spans. The company coordinates design specifications with those standards during the planning phase. Soil conditions and drainage are factored into footing placement given the varied terrain across the county.

Outdoor living additions such as decks have remained among the more frequently requested home improvements in Texas, supported by extended warm-season use and interest in expanded usable space. "Demand for durable outdoor space has held steady across the region," said Garcia. "Extending coverage to Brenham responds to that pattern and to requests from residents who preferred a nearby provider."

Details on service offerings, materials, and project planning for the expanded coverage area are available through All Pro CS Decks. Scheduling and design consultations for Brenham and the wider Washington County area are handled directly by the company.
