Midwest Moving Company Opens West Fargo Operations With Local Hiring

August 24, 2026

CHARLOTTE, NC - August 24, 2026 -
Midwest Moving Company has expanded its operations into West Fargo, hiring locally and offering residential and commercial relocation services along with packing, storage and an online resource covering the moving process.

The company said it staffed the expansion with local hires rather than assigning crews from existing locations. Representatives said familiarity with the area affects routing, building access and scheduling, and that crews working in a market they know handle those variables with fewer complications.

Local knowledge matters more than customers expect, according to representatives. They said access conditions vary considerably between older neighborhoods and newer developments, and that crews unfamiliar with an area sometimes arrive with equipment or vehicle sizes that do not suit a given property.

Services cover packing, loading, transport, unloading and storage, according to the company. Representatives said storage is arranged as part of scheduling rather than separately, since gaps between closing dates or lease terms are a common reason customers need it.

Customers evaluating local moving companies in West Fargo generally ask about estimate accuracy, damage coverage and scheduling flexibility, according to representatives. They said these are addressed during the estimate rather than raised after a contract is signed.

Estimates involve a survey of what is being moved, according to the company. Representatives said quotes generated from a room count alone frequently miss items in basements, garages and storage areas, and that this accounts for much of the difference between quoted and final costs in the industry.

Vehicle and packing material selection accounts for fuel efficiency and reuse where the application allows, according to the company. Representatives said packing materials in good condition are recovered after unpacking service, and that routing is planned to reduce total mileage across scheduled jobs.

Seasonal conditions shape scheduling locally, according to local moving companies in West Fargo. They said moves concentrate in warmer months and that winter work requires additional preparation, including floor protection and handling adjustments for items sensitive to cold.

The online resource covers preparation, timeline planning and what to expect at each stage of a move, according to the company. Representatives said topics were drawn from questions raised during estimates, and that the material is intended to be useful whether or not a reader books with the company.

Commercial work is part of the West Fargo offering, according to the company. Representatives said business relocations often require scheduling outside operating hours or across a weekend, and that local staffing makes those schedules easier to accommodate.

Specialty items are identified during the survey, according to representatives. They said pianos, safes, large appliances and items requiring disassembly affect crew size and timing, and that identifying them in advance prevents adjustments on moving day.

Representatives said the company expects a portion of its West Fargo work to involve moves within the metro area rather than between cities. They said local moves are priced and scheduled differently than longer relocations, since crews can complete more than one job in a day when distances are short.

Apartment and multi-unit moves account for another share of expected volume, according to the company. Representatives said these involve elevator reservations, loading dock access and building move-in windows, and that confirming those details with property management in advance prevents delays on the scheduled day.

New construction in the area affects timing as well, according to representatives. They said moves tied to a home still under construction sometimes shift on short notice, and that scheduling accounts for the possibility of a delayed closing rather than treating the date as fixed.

The company said it plans to review capacity after the first full moving season in the market. Representatives said decisions about additional hiring will depend on volume through the busier months, and that no timeline has been set.
