Aussie Undercover Launches New Pool Cover Range

August 25, 2026

SOUTH NOWRA, NSW - August 25, 2026 -
Aussie Undercover has announced the launch of a new range of pool covers in Adelaide, providing homeowners and commercial pool operators with additional options for covering and managing their pools. Led by founder John Williamson, the company offers pool cover products in several configurations to accommodate different pool designs, sizes and customer requirements.

The new range includes covers designed to help reduce water evaporation from exposed pools. Pool covers can form part of regular pool maintenance, particularly during warmer periods when water can be lost through evaporation. For Adelaide pool owners, covering a pool when it is not in use provides another option for managing water levels and incorporating practical water-saving measures into their routine pool care.

Williamson said the new covers have been selected with everyday use and durability in mind. The range includes automatic, manual and custom-fit options, giving customers the ability to consider factors such as pool dimensions, layout, frequency of use and preferred method of operation. By offering several configurations, Aussie Undercover aims to provide options for both residential and commercial pool settings.

Automatic covers can provide a convenient option for customers who prefer a cover that can be operated with less manual handling. Manual covers offer an alternative for pool owners who prefer a straightforward approach, while custom-fit options can be considered for pools with specific dimensions or layouts. Customers can discuss their pool requirements with Aussie Undercover when deciding which available option may be suitable.

The company also provides installation services for customers who require assistance with fitting their selected cover. Installation requirements can vary depending on the type of cover, pool design and available space around the pool. Discussing these factors before installation can help customers understand the requirements associated with their chosen cover and how it is intended to be used.

Pool covers can also be used as part of a broader approach to routine pool maintenance. When a pool is covered between uses, the cover creates a physical barrier over the water that can help limit exposure to leaves, dirt and other outdoor debris. This may be particularly useful for pool owners looking to manage cleaning tasks during periods when their pool is not being used regularly.

The launch of these pool covers in Adelaide comes as local pool owners manage their pools through changing seasonal conditions. Temperature changes and periods of warmer weather can influence water levels and maintenance routines, while changes in pool usage may affect how frequently a cover is required. Having different cover styles available allows customers to consider their individual circumstances when selecting a product.

Aussie Undercover is also planning a series of workshops and informational sessions throughout Adelaide to provide information about pool covers and their use. The sessions are intended for residential pool owners and commercial operators interested in learning more about available cover configurations and practical pool management considerations.

The workshops will provide an opportunity for participants to learn about different types of pool covers and factors that may be relevant when selecting an option. Topics can include cover configurations, installation considerations and the role a pool cover can play when a pool is not in use. These sessions are intended to give customers additional information before making decisions about their pool management needs.

For Adelaide homeowners and commercial pool operators considering a new cover, factors such as pool dimensions, access, frequency of use and preferred operation can all be considered when comparing available products. Automatic, manual and custom-fit options provide different approaches, allowing customers to select a configuration that aligns with their particular pool and day-to-day requirements.

With the launch of its new range, Aussie Undercover is expanding the pool cover options available to customers across Adelaide. The company?s range and installation services are intended to provide customers with practical choices for covering their pools and incorporating a cover into their existing maintenance routine.

For more information about the available pool covers, installation services and upcoming workshops, interested customers can contact Aussie Undercover directly or visit the company?s website. Further product information can help customers compare the available options and determine which configuration is appropriate for their pool.
