Southern Turf has announced the launch of its latest product, Bodalla Turf, expanding the company's range of turf solutions for residential and commercial landscaping applications. Grown and harvested near Bodalla on the New South Wales South Coast, the turf provides customers with another locally grown option for establishing lawns and landscaped outdoor spaces. The launch adds a new product to Southern Turf's existing range while highlighting the company's connection to local turf production.

Bodalla Turf is intended for use across a range of landscaping projects, including residential gardens, commercial properties and other outdoor areas where turf is required. Its suitability for a particular project can depend on factors such as soil conditions, sunlight, drainage, intended use and ongoing maintenance. Southern Turf provides information about the product so customers can consider these factors when planning a new lawn or replacing an existing one.

Joe Anderson, Founder and Director of Southern Turf, said the company considered the practical requirements of customers when developing and introducing Bodalla Turf. According to Southern Turf, the product is grown and harvested locally near Bodalla, providing an option for customers interested in sourcing turf produced in the region. Local production also forms part of the company's broader approach to supplying turf for Australian landscaping projects.

The launch comes as property owners and landscaping professionals continue to consider a range of factors when selecting turf. These considerations can include the intended appearance of a lawn, the amount of foot traffic it is expected to receive, local growing conditions and the level of maintenance required. Southern Turf encourages customers to assess their individual site requirements before selecting a turf variety.

Bodalla Turf can be considered for projects where establishing a new lawn is part of a broader landscaping plan. Proper site preparation and installation are important steps in the process, while watering, mowing and other routine maintenance can influence how a lawn develops over time. Customers can seek information from Southern Turf about the product and the considerations associated with installation and ongoing lawn care.

Southern Turf has also published a resource on its official blog covering Bodalla Turf and providing information about lawn care. The guide is designed to give property owners and landscaping professionals additional information when considering turf for their projects. It includes practical considerations related to establishing and maintaining a lawn, allowing readers to review relevant information before moving forward with an installation.

Sustainability is another consideration highlighted by Southern Turf as part of its approach to landscaping. The company encourages customers to consider practical factors such as local sourcing, appropriate watering practices and regular maintenance when evaluating turf options. These factors can form part of a broader approach to managing outdoor spaces and maintaining lawns according to their specific site conditions.

The introduction of Bodalla Turf gives Southern Turf customers another option within its turf range. Because lawn requirements can vary between properties, customers can consider factors including location, soil preparation, expected use and maintenance needs when determining whether the product is appropriate for a particular project. Professional advice may also help customers identify the turf option that aligns with their landscaping requirements.

For more information about Bodalla Turf, interested customers can visit Southern Turf's website and review the company's available resources. The information provides further details about the product, its local production and general lawn care considerations. By providing product information and practical guidance, Southern Turf aims to support customers as they evaluate turf options for residential and commercial landscaping projects across Australia.
