August 25, 2026

August 25, 2026 -

Mogo Wheelchairs has announced an expansion of its mobility services in Sydney, introducing additional opportunities for customers to explore wheelchair options and access information about mobility products. The initiative includes plans for a showroom and educational activities intended to support customers and caregivers researching mobility equipment. The company says the expansion forms part of its ongoing efforts to provide information and product access to people seeking wheelchair solutions in the Sydney area.

The planned showroom will give customers an opportunity to view different wheelchair options and discuss their individual requirements with Mogo Wheelchairs staff. Customers will be able to explore available products and ask questions about features, configurations and potential applications. The company says its staff can provide consultations and assessments to help customers consider options based on their mobility requirements.

The showroom will also provide an additional resource for customers researching wheelchairs in Sydney. Selecting a wheelchair can involve considering factors such as comfort, fit, manoeuvrability, intended use and available features. Individual requirements can vary, so customers may benefit from discussing their circumstances with appropriately qualified professionals before making a decision.

Mogo Wheelchairs has also announced plans to hold workshops and seminars as part of its Sydney initiative. These sessions are intended to provide information for wheelchair users, caregivers and others interested in mobility equipment. Topics may include wheelchair features, product considerations and developments within the broader mobility sector, with further information about individual sessions to be provided by the company.

The planned educational activities form part of Mogo Wheelchairs' broader approach to providing customers with information alongside access to mobility products. Workshops can give attendees opportunities to ask questions and learn more about subjects relevant to wheelchair use and equipment selection. The company plans to share additional details about upcoming sessions as arrangements are finalised.

In addition to the planned showroom activities, Mogo Wheelchairs is preparing to launch an online portal for customers seeking information about wheelchairs in Sydney. The resource is expected to include articles, product information and other educational content relating to mobility solutions. The online portal will provide another way for customers to access information when researching wheelchair options and related considerations.

The combination of in-person and digital resources will give customers different ways to engage with Mogo Wheelchairs. Those who prefer to examine products in person will be able to use the company's showroom services, while customers conducting initial research online will be able to access digital resources through the planned portal. These options are intended to provide additional information during the process of researching mobility equipment.

Mogo Wheelchairs will provide further information about the showroom, including visitor arrangements and availability, as the initiative progresses. Customers interested in consultations, product information or upcoming educational activities can contact the company directly for current details.

The expansion represents an addition to the ways Mogo Wheelchairs provides information and access to its mobility products in Sydney. By offering opportunities to explore wheelchair options, speak with staff and access educational resources, the company is developing additional services for people researching mobility solutions.
