South Shore Basement Finishing Company Expands Service Area to Abington

October 16, 2026

QUINCY, MA - October 16, 2026 -
South Shore Basement Finishing Company has extended its residential and commercial basement remodeling operations into Abington, Massachusetts, adding the town to a service network that now reaches 28 communities across the region south of Boston. The addition gives Abington property owners access to a locally based contractor for basement finishing, renovation, and waterproofing work.

The expansion places Abington alongside towns already served across the South Shore, including Quincy, Weymouth, Braintree, Plymouth, and Brockton. Within the new coverage area, the company handles the full sequence of a basement project, from layout design and planning through electrical, plumbing, and heating and cooling integration, followed by flooring, wall, and ceiling finishes. Waterproofing and moisture control are also part of the standard scope, addressing a common obstacle for below-grade construction in older housing stock.

Basement finishing converts unused below-grade square footage into conditioned, code-compliant living area, an approach that many homeowners weigh as an alternative to relocating or adding an above-ground addition. The work typically requires coordination with existing plumbing and electrical systems, attention to insulation, and compliance with local building codes, factors that can slow projects handled without a dedicated contractor. Extending a single crew across a defined regional footprint allows scheduling, permitting, and material sourcing to follow a consistent process from one town to the next. Finished basements can also add usable square footage without altering a home's exterior footprint, a consideration in established neighborhoods where lot space is limited.

"Abington homeowners have asked for a local option to turn underused basement space into finished rooms, and the expansion answers that request directly," said Susan Snow, owner of South Shore Basement Finishing Company. "Serving the town as part of an established South Shore route keeps crews close to each job site and shortens the timeline from consultation to completion."

The company holds a 2026 Quality Business Award in the basement renovation category, a recognition tied to its work in the Massachusetts market. That credential accompanies the Abington expansion as the firm broadens the number of communities where the same design and construction standards apply.

The South Shore, the coastal region extending southeast from Boston toward Cape Cod, contains a large share of mid-twentieth-century homes built with full basement levels. Those spaces are frequently used for storage rather than living area, which the company points to as the reason demand for finishing and waterproofing has held steady across its territory. Adding Abington extends that work into another town with a comparable housing profile.

Projects within the Abington service area cover a range of finished uses, including home offices and workspaces, entertainment rooms and home theaters, guest suites and additional bedrooms, and fitness or wellness areas. The company also completes basement bathrooms, built-in shelving and cabinetry, along with custom lighting and smart-home controls. Each project begins with a consultation and a layout plan developed around the dimensions and intended function of the space.

Abington sits roughly 20 miles southeast of Boston and has a population of fewer than 20,000 residents, with Ames Nowell State Park and Cleveland Pond forming a wooded stretch in the town's northwestern corner. Much of the local housing stock includes basement levels suited to conversion, which the company identifies as a factor in adding the town to its route. Coverage in Abington applies to both residential and commercial clients.

The 28-community footprint now stretches from communities closer to Boston, such as Milton and Quincy, to towns farther south, including Plymouth and Marshfield. By folding Abington into that network, South Shore Basement Finishing Company reports that it can maintain the same crews, suppliers, and project management across the newly added territory rather than subcontracting work in the area. Residents can learn more about available services and request a project consultation.
