Evergreen Landscape Pros Expands Hardscape and Stonework Services to Eldorado

October 28, 2026

SANTA FE, NM - October 28, 2026 -
Evergreen Landscape Pros, a landscaping contractor based in Santa Fe, New Mexico, has expanded its hardscape and stonework services into the Eldorado at Santa Fe community, bringing retaining wall, stone walkway, and paver patio construction to homeowners throughout the neighborhood.

The expanded offering covers the full range of stonework the company builds elsewhere in the Santa Fe area, including segmental and stone retaining walls, paver patios, natural stone walkways, outdoor fire pits, and outdoor kitchens. Crews handle both new installation and the repair of existing masonry, and the work is coordinated with the company's grading, drainage, and irrigation services so that a single contractor manages each project from design through completion.

Eldorado at Santa Fe is an unincorporated community of roughly 6,088 residents and is reported to be the largest unincorporated community in New Mexico. The area sits on high-desert terrain marked by elevation changes and native piñon-juniper vegetation, conditions that frequently call for retaining walls to manage slope, control erosion, and create level outdoor living space. A 4,000-acre nature preserve and extensive protected open space have made the neighborhood an established residential market where exterior improvements are common.

Retaining wall construction is a central part of the added service because many Eldorado lots follow the natural grade of the surrounding foothills. Depending on site conditions, crews build segmental concrete block walls, dry-stacked stone, and mortared stone structures, each engineered to hold soil, redirect runoff, and support terraced patios or planting beds on sloped ground.

"The expansion gives Eldorado residents local access to retaining wall and stonework construction without waiting for crews to travel in from outside the area," said Kevin Lopez, owner of Evergreen Landscape Pros. Lopez added that proximity shortens response times for repairs and allows closer supervision of each build, since the company operates from a base in Santa Fe.

Hardscape features also align with the water-conservation priorities common across northern New Mexico, where stone patios, gravel courtyards, and dry-set walkways reduce the amount of irrigated lawn a property requires. Stone and gravel surfaces also hold up under intense high-altitude sun and seasonal temperature swings that can crack poured concrete. That overlap places the expansion alongside the xeriscaping and desert-landscaping work the company already performs in the region.

The move extends a service footprint that already includes Santa Fe, Tesuque, White Rock, Galisteo, Pecos, and several surrounding communities. Within Eldorado, the company pairs hardscape and stonework with related exterior services such as coyote, latilla, cedar, and stone fencing, along with drip irrigation and drainage systems, allowing multi-part outdoor projects to proceed under one crew rather than several separate contractors. In all, the company now lists about ten northern New Mexico communities within its coverage area.

The expansion also reflects broader activity in the Santa Fe-area outdoor construction market, where paver patios, portals, and stone walkways have become common additions to existing homes rather than features reserved for new builds. Projects generally begin with an on-site assessment and layout before excavation, base preparation, and stone setting, a sequence intended to keep finished surfaces stable through the region's freeze-thaw cycles.

Evergreen Landscape Pros schedules estimates and project work from its Santa Fe office during weekday and Saturday hours and continues to handle design, installation, maintenance, and restoration alongside the newly extended stonework line. Lopez said the addition responds to steady demand for durable, low-maintenance outdoor surfaces among Eldorado property owners rather than a shift away from the company's existing planting and irrigation work.
