

Fohn Funeral Home Expands Personalized Funeral Services for Southwest Missouri Families

October 05, 2026

CASSVILLE, MO - October 05, 2026 -

Fohn Funeral Home, a family-owned provider serving Cassville, Wheaton, and surrounding Southwest Missouri communities for more than 33 years, has outlined an expanded approach to personalized end-of-life care that gives families greater flexibility in how they honor their loved ones. The announcement reflects a growing demand among families for ceremonies tailored to the individuality of the person being remembered.

Under the expanded approach, Fohn Funeral Home Funeral Services allow families to choose between burial or cremation and between a formal traditional funeral or a more relaxed memorial gathering. Each ceremony is designed to reflect the unique life, values, and wishes of the person being honored, with staff working closely alongside each family to assemble the details needed for a meaningful observance.

A traditional funeral service typically includes removal of the deceased to the mortuary, professional embalming, cosmetizing and dressing of the deceased, and obituary preparation. Services can be held within the funeral home's own setting or at a location of the family's choosing, providing friends and relatives an opportunity to gather, share memories, and find support throughout the grieving process.

The funeral home, owned and operated by Todd and Bethany McCoy, has served families in the region since 1990. Over that time it has broadened its offerings to include cremation options, memorial and graveside ceremonies, pre-arrangement planning, obituary services, and grief support resources. The organization also provides specialized assistance for military veterans, including coordination of military honors and guidance on veterans' burial benefits.

Bethany McCoy, co-owner of Fohn Funeral Home, said the expanded focus responds to the way families increasingly wish to approach remembrance. "Every family arrives with different traditions, beliefs, and hopes for how they want to say goodbye," McCoy said. "The goal is to give them room to make choices that feel right, whether that means a formal traditional service or a simpler memorial gathering that reflects the personality of the person being honored."

McCoy added that the planning process is built around collaboration. "Sitting down with a family and learning about the person they loved is the most important part of the work," she said. "From the first conversation to the final arrangement, the aim is to carry the weight of the details so families can focus on supporting one another."

In addition to arrangement services, Fohn Funeral Home maintains a grief support program and educational resources intended to help families understand their options and make decisions that align with their wishes and budget. The funeral home has also implemented enhanced safety protocols in response to evolving community health considerations, continuing to adapt its services to remain accessible and comfortable for all families.

Fohn Funeral Home operates from its main location in Cassville, Missouri, with McQueen Funeral Home serving the Wheaton community. Both are owned and operated by Todd and Bethany McCoy. For more than three decades, the funeral homes have combined traditional funeral home practices with modern approaches to grief support and memorial planning, establishing themselves as trusted resources for end-of-life care across Southwest Missouri.
