

Leo's Vacation Center Begins Seasonal Winterizing Work as Fall Travel Winds Down

September 02, 2026

GAMBRILLS, MD - September 02, 2026 -

Leo's Vacation Center has begun scheduling winterizing services for RVs as owners complete late-summer and early-fall trips. The family-owned dealership, in operation since 1972, lists winterizing among the maintenance procedures performed by its certified technicians, along with related systems work that prepares units for colder weather storage or reduced use.

Winterizing is a standard seasonal service for travel trailers, fifth wheels, motorhomes and other recreational vehicles that remain unused or stored during colder months. The process addresses water systems and other components that can be affected by freezing temperatures. Leo's Vacation Center performs this work in its service and preparation area, which the dealership describes as a 20,000 square foot facility. Technicians also handle plumbing service, LP systems, electrical repairs, brakes, hitch work, and Maryland State RV inspections for trailers as part of broader maintenance activity.

Greg Merkel, Owner of Leo's Vacation Center, stated, "September is when many owners finish the last trips of the warm-weather season and begin planning storage or limited use. Scheduling winterizing before the first freeze reduces the chance of damage to water lines and related systems."

The dealership sells new and used recreational vehicles, including Class A, B and C motorhomes, travel trailers, fifth wheels, toy haulers and compact towable models. Qualifying purchases include a one-year Harvest Host membership. Pricing is presented without added fees for freight, documentation or preparation, according to the company. Sales and service operate from a site that includes a 12,000 square foot indoor showroom, which the dealership states is the largest in Maryland and allows vehicle comparison regardless of outdoor weather.

Merkel added, "Winterizing is one of several seasonal procedures the service department performs each year. Owners who keep units in use through the fall can still benefit from an inspection of plumbing, LP and electrical systems before temperatures drop."

Leo's Vacation Center reports that it has been operated by the same family for more than 54 years and cites more than 180 years of combined RV service experience among its technicians. The company identifies itself as the number one motorhome dealer in Maryland for 12 years and among the top 50 RV dealers in the United States. It also states that it maintains one of the largest parts inventories in the region, which supports both seasonal winterizing and other repairs. Those rankings and facility descriptions appear on the dealership's own materials.

As temperatures begin to change, the dealership notes that demand for winterizing typically rises once regular camping weekends become less frequent. Appointments allow technicians to complete the work before overnight lows approach freezing. Owners who continue traveling into autumn can combine winterizing with other service items such as brake checks, battery evaluation, and appliance inspection. The indoor showroom remains available for those comparing models while service work is underway elsewhere on the property.

The service department works on units sold by the dealership as well as other recreational vehicles brought in for maintenance. Authorized repair work includes major brand appliances and related systems. Extended service programs, including a lifetime warranty option the dealership says it offers exclusively in Maryland, are separate from seasonal winterizing and are subject to their own terms.

Leo's Vacation Center was founded in 1972 and remains under the same family ownership. The business operates as a full-service RV dealership with sales, parts, service, and warranty departments. Its stated mission is to provide knowledge, experience, and support in selecting an RV and to maintain a service and parts commitment for the duration of ownership.
