

Byerly RV Highlights End-of-Season RV Maintenance as Travel Periods Shift

September 02, 2026

TROY, MO - September 02, 2026 -

Byerly RV is drawing attention to end-of-season RV maintenance as summer travel activity begins to ease and owners transition toward fall outings or storage. The dealership is emphasizing scheduled inspections and preventative service as a practical step in keeping recreational vehicles operational after months of road use.

Summer travel places sustained demand on RV systems. Roof seals, appliances, electrical components, plumbing, slide-outs, generators, and running gear often show wear after repeated trips, temperature changes, and extended time outdoors. Addressing those conditions before cooler weather arrives can reduce the likelihood of leaks, battery issues, and mechanical problems that surface later in the year.

Warren Patton, President and Owner of Byerly RV, said, "Many of the issues that appear after the camping season are the result of wear that accumulated during travel. A thorough inspection at the end of summer gives owners a clearer picture of what their RV needs before the next trip or before it is stored."

Byerly RV operates a 16-bay service facility staffed by RVTI-trained and certified technicians. The department services motorhomes, travel trailers, fifth wheels, camper vans, and toy haulers, including units not purchased from the dealership. Common work includes roof reseals and leak inspections, appliance diagnostics, electrical troubleshooting, plumbing repairs, slide-out adjustments, sealant replacement, generator service, and manufacturer-recommended maintenance at three-month, six-month, and 12-month intervals.

The dealership also offers Express Lane same-day service for qualifying routine maintenance, minor repairs, and basic diagnostics. That option is intended to reduce wait times during a period when many owners want service completed before fall weekends or before placing a unit in storage. A separate body shop handles collision and exterior work that may have occurred during the travel season.

End-of-season service often includes checks that owners overlook after a busy summer. Tire condition and pressure, wheel bearings, batteries, heating and cooling systems, and water systems all require attention as temperatures change. Moisture left in plumbing lines, worn roof sealant, and neglected filters can create larger problems once overnight lows drop. Byerly RV University classes cover seasonal preparation, winterization concepts, and basic systems operation, giving owners context for the work performed in the service bays.

The timing of fall maintenance also affects later storage decisions. Units that enter indoor or outdoor storage without inspection may sit with undetected leaks or electrical faults. Completing service first allows technicians to document condition and complete repairs while parts and scheduling are more readily available than during the spring rush.

RV ownership involves recurring operational cycles rather than a single annual event. Travel, inspection, repair, and storage form a pattern that repeats each year. Dealerships that maintain large service capacity and educational programs play a role in helping owners complete that cycle without carrying unresolved issues from one season into the next.

Byerly RV, established in 1948, is a third-generation family-owned dealership serving the St. Louis area. The Patton family has expanded the company from its origins as a travel trailer manufacturer into a full-service operation with sales, parts, rentals, storage, and a body shop.

The company has received multiple Top 50 Dealer Awards in North America and is Missouri's only member of the Priority RV Network, which provides customers with access to more than 180 service locations nationwide. Through its service center and Byerly RV University, the dealership continues to support owners in maintaining vehicles across changing travel seasons.
