

Pleasant Vine Home Care Launches Senior Care Resource Website

September 03, 2026

WILMINGTON, DE - September 03, 2026 -

Pleasant Vine Home Care announced the launch of DelawareHomeCareGuide.com, a new online educational resource designed to help Delaware families research home care, aging in place, family caregiving, and senior support options. The website brings together city-specific information, educational articles, explanations of common home care services, and links to independent community resources in one location.

The new website was developed as an informational resource for families who may be beginning the process of determining whether an aging parent or other loved one needs additional support at home. Rather than focusing solely on Pleasant Vine Home Care's services, the site includes broader educational material intended to help families better understand common care situations and the decisions that often accompany them.

Visitors can access information about senior home care, personal care, companion care, respite care, dementia care support, and aging-in-place assistance. The website also includes educational content addressing subjects such as identifying signs that an aging parent may need home care, understanding the differences between home care and assisted living, preparing a home for aging in place, recognizing caregiver burnout, and understanding the role of a companion caregiver.

The launch comes as many families find themselves responsible for researching care for parents or relatives while also managing work, family responsibilities, and other obligations. DelawareHomeCareGuide.com is structured to make that research process easier by organizing information according to both care topics and local communities.

For example, an adult child who has noticed that a parent is having difficulty preparing meals, keeping appointments, or completing daily activities can use the site to learn about common indicators that additional support may be appropriate. A family evaluating whether a parent should remain at home or consider assisted living can review educational material explaining the differences between those options. Family caregivers who are becoming overwhelmed can also find information about respite care and the signs associated with caregiver burnout.

The website currently includes detailed local resource pages for Wilmington, Newark, and Bear in New Castle County. Those pages provide locally relevant information about aging in place and home care while connecting visitors with independent resources such as senior centers, transportation programs, government aging resources, meal programs, hospitals, libraries, and community organizations. Additional community pages are expected to be developed as local research and resource verification are completed.

"Families often begin looking for home care information because something has changed in the life of someone they care about, and they may not know what questions to ask or where to begin," said a company representative of Pleasant Vine Home Care. "The purpose of the Delaware Home Care Guide is to give families a place where they can learn about the different issues involved, explore local resources, and become better informed before making decisions about care."

The Wilmington section of the website provides an example of the site's community-focused approach. In addition to information about home care in Wilmington, visitors can access educational material, frequently asked questions, and contact information for independent senior and caregiver resources. The page also incorporates multimedia educational content from Pleasant Vine Home Care and location information for the company's Wilmington-area office.

The Newark and Bear sections follow a similar structure while providing content specific to those communities. Newark visitors, for example, can find information connected to local resources such as senior services, transportation, and nearby health care facilities. The Bear section provides information about community services and resources serving residents in and around the Route 40 corridor and southern New Castle County.

DelawareHomeCareGuide.com also contains a growing Senior Care Resources library. Articles are organized around subjects including aging in place, family caregiving, choosing home care, senior safety, dementia and memory support, and home care costs. The articles are intended for educational purposes and include references to outside organizations and public resources where appropriate.

The website distinguishes educational information from medical guidance. Pleasant Vine Home Care provides non-medical home care, and the site advises visitors to consult qualified health care professionals regarding medical conditions, diagnoses, and treatment decisions.

Another purpose of the resource is to help families prepare for conversations before contacting a home care provider. Someone researching care for a parent may use an article about home care agency selection to develop questions for prospective providers. Another visitor may review information about fall prevention before considering changes to a loved one's home environment. Someone caring for a relative with increasing memory concerns may begin by researching the types of non-medical assistance that can support everyday routines while also consulting appropriate medical professionals about the underlying condition.

Pleasant Vine Home Care serves individuals and families throughout New Castle County and maintains an office at 3200 Concord Pike, Suite 105, Wilmington, Delaware. The company provides non-medical home care services intended to help older adults and other individuals receive assistance with daily living while remaining in familiar surroundings.

DelawareHomeCareGuide.com is now available to the public, and additional local information and educational resources are planned as the website develops. Families, caregivers, and community members seeking information about home care, aging in place, and senior resources in Delaware can visit DelawareHomeCareGuide.com to learn more.
