Bucket City Deck Contractors Expands Repair and Restoration Work

November 02, 2026

Murfreesboro, TN - November 02, 2026 -
Bucket City Deck Contractors has broadened its deck repair and restoration services, adding structural repair, surface refinishing, mold and mildew treatment, and wood-to-composite conversion options for homeowners throughout Rutherford County, Tennessee. The expanded lineup responds to wear patterns tied to the region's humid summers and shifting seasonal temperatures, conditions that commonly cause wood rot, fading, warping, and splintering in outdoor decking.

The updated repair scope now includes replacement of damaged boards, reinforcement of loose railings and support posts, and inspection of framing and joists for structural soundness before work begins on a project. Fasteners, post anchors, and other hardware are checked for corrosion or wear as part of the same visit. Homeowners whose decks have outgrown their original footprint can also request an expansion or addition, in which existing beams and joists are extended and tied into new framing.

Restoration services cover sanding, staining, sealing, and mold or mildew removal intended to return an existing deck's surface and protective coating to functional condition. As part of the expanded lineup, homeowners can also choose to replace worn wood boards with composite decking on a frame that remains structurally sound, an option intended to reduce future maintenance without rebuilding a deck from the ground up. Composite decking is manufactured from wood fibers and recycled plastic and does not require periodic staining or sealing in the way that natural wood does.

Middle Tennessee's climate, which includes humid summers, heavy spring rainfall, and freeze-thaw cycles in winter, subjects exterior wood structures to conditions that accelerate deterioration compared with drier regions. Untreated or under-maintained decking in the area can develop surface checking, board cupping, and fastener corrosion within a few years of installation. Spring and fall remain the preferred windows for restoration work in the Nashville area, since moderate temperatures allow stains and sealants to dry evenly before seasonal humidity or cold returns.

Each project begins with an on-site inspection during which crews assess joist and beam condition and check for signs of rot or insect damage. Based on that assessment, the company outlines whether a deck qualifies for repair, full restoration, or a combination approach that addresses both structural and cosmetic wear. Pressure-treated pine is the material most frequently replaced during restoration projects in the region, while cedar and redwood are used less often due to higher material costs.

Bucket City Deck Contractors reported that repair costs for a typical Rutherford County project range from 300 dollars to 1,000 dollars, while a full restoration, depending on deck size, material, and extent of damage, can range from 1,500 dollars to 5,000 dollars. Project cost is determined after the initial inspection rather than before it. The company has operated in the Murfreesboro area for more than a decade and separately provides deck design and installation, patio and hardscape construction, and pergola installation.

"The goal of widening the repair and restoration lineup is to give homeowners a path to keep an existing deck safe and usable instead of defaulting to full replacement," said Dave Harris, owner of Bucket City Deck Contractors. "A deck with loose boards or surface damage in Rutherford County's climate often needs targeted structural work paired with refinishing, and the expanded services are built to cover both during a single project."

Bucket City Deck Contractors serves Murfreesboro and surrounding Rutherford County communities, including La Vergne, Smyrna, Brentwood, Franklin, Mt. Juliet, and Spring Hill. Inspections and estimates for the expanded services are scheduled Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Saturday from 8 a.m. to noon.

The expanded deck restoration services are scheduled through an on-site inspection, after which crews outline the recommended scope of repair or restoration for a given deck. For more information, visit the
