

Markhoff & Mittman, P.C. Updates Disability Lawyer Resources

September 08, 2026

September 08, 2026 -
Markhoff & Mittman, P.C., also known as The Disability Guys, has expanded access to disability-law information through its recently rebuilt website and its Goshen office in 2026, organizing materials on Social Security Disability, long-term disability, workers? compensation, and related legal processes. The update gives the firm a centralized platform for publishing information about disability claims, administrative proceedings, and the legal issues that can arise when an injury or medical condition affects employment.

?The updated resources give the firm a structured way to explain the procedures that commonly arise in disability matters and to keep that information organized as laws and administrative processes develop,? said Brian Mittman, Esq., Managing Partner of Markhoff & Mittman, P.C.

The Disability Guys is the public-facing name used by Markhoff & Mittman, P.C., a New York law firm whose practice includes Social Security Disability, long-term disability, workers? compensation, personal injury, and workers? rights matters. Firm information available through The Disability Guys states that the organization has operated for more than 93 years and currently maintains seven offices across New York.

The firm?s Goshen office is located at 99 Main Street, Suite 2, and serves as one of its Hudson Valley locations. The office handles matters involving Social Security Disability Insurance, Supplemental Security Income, long-term disability, workers? compensation, and other claims connected with a person?s ability to work following an injury or disabling condition. Additional office information is available through the firm?s Goshen office page.

Social Security Disability matters involve a federal administrative process administered by the Social Security Administration. Applicants submit medical, employment, and other records for review, and denied claims can proceed through reconsideration, hearings, and additional administrative or federal review depending on the circumstances. Disability lawyers working in this area evaluate records, identify procedural requirements, prepare filings, and represent claimants during stages of the administrative process.

Long-term disability matters follow a different framework because claims can arise under employer-sponsored benefit plans, private insurance policies, or plans governed by the Employee Retirement Income Security Act. Attorneys reviewing these matters examine policy provisions, medical documentation, benefit determinations, administrative records, and applicable filing deadlines. The legal framework can vary according to the type of plan and the circumstances surrounding a benefit determination.

Workers? compensation represents another component of the firm?s disability-related practice. New York workers? compensation proceedings address workplace injuries and occupational conditions through a state administrative system, while disability claims under federal programs operate under separate eligibility standards and procedures. Situations involving the same injury or medical condition can therefore produce multiple legal and administrative questions that require separate filings, records, and review processes.

Mittman has practiced law for more than three decades and is admitted in New York. Firm materials identify his practice areas as workers? compensation, Social Security Disability, long-term disability, and personal injury, and identify him as Managing Partner of Markhoff & Mittman, P.C. His professional background also includes practice before federal courts and representation in administrative proceedings involving disability and workplace injury matters.

The rebuilt website organizes articles, videos, guides, and answers covering disability and injury law. The firm?s resource center addresses topics including disability eligibility, denied claims, workers? compensation procedures, available benefits, and common procedural questions. The materials are presented as general information rather than individualized legal advice.

The Disability Guys maintains offices in White Plains, Yonkers, Manhattan, Brooklyn, Newburgh, Goshen, and Poughkeepsie. The firm also provides information about disability and workplace injury procedures through its online materials, allowing the website to serve as a central reference point for updates connected with its practice areas.

For more information about The Disability Guys and its disability-law resources, information is available through the firm?s official website.
