

Sugaring Hair Removal Brings Ancient Technique to Modern Skincare

September 08, 2026

MISSOULA, MT - September 08, 2026 -

Honey Sugaring and Facials, an esthetic studio in Missoula, Montana, has introduced sugaring hair removal as a central service offering, drawing on a technique with origins dating back thousands of years to address contemporary demand for natural approaches to body hair removal and skin care.

The sugaring method relies on a paste made from three ingredients ? sugar, water, and lemon juice ? applied directly to the skin at body temperature. Unlike conventional waxing, which typically requires heated resin-based wax applied with strips, the sugaring paste is molded by hand and removed with a gentle pulling motion in the same direction the hair grows. This form of epilation extracts hair from the follicle rather than breaking it at the surface, which distinguishes the sugaring technique from shaving and other common removal methods. Individuals who shave generally see regrowth within days, while those who choose sugaring for hair removal may notice slower hair growth over repeated sessions.

Historical records place the origins of the sugar paste method in ancient Egypt and Mesopotamia around 1900 BC, according to research published by JAMA Dermatology. The practice spread through the Middle East, Greece, and the broader Mediterranean world as an established approach to removing unwanted body hair. The composition of the paste ? sugar, lemon, and water ? has remained largely unchanged across centuries, making sugaring one of the oldest documented beauty practices still in active use. The persistence of the technique reflects the simplicity of its natural ingredients and the absence of chemical additives or synthetic compounds in the sugaring process.

The modern sugaring hair removal market has grown substantially. According to The Business Research Company, the global market reached an estimated $3.25 billion in 2025 and is projected to expand to $3.89 billion by 2029 at a compound annual growth rate of 4.6 percent. North America accounts for a significant share of this growth, driven by increasing interest in self care routines centered on natural skincare and sustainable beauty practices. The expansion of spa and salon offerings that include sugar waxing alongside laser hair removal and IPL hair removal has contributed to broader consumer awareness of hair removal sugaring and other available methods.

Honey Sugaring and Facials operates from a private studio at 308 W Pine St, Suite B01, in Missoula. A licensed esthetician provides consultations before each sugaring treatment to evaluate individual skin types, sensitivity, and hair growth patterns. The studio offers body sugaring across a full range of treatment areas, including eyebrow shaping, face, bikini line, full brazilian, underarms, and legs. The traditional hand technique used at the studio, sometimes referred to as sugar wax application, does not require heat from a warming device, reducing the risk of burn or discomfort associated with hot wax hair removal.

Each session includes exfoliation of the treated area, as the sugaring paste naturally exfoliates dead skin cells during the removal process. The studio also carries sugaring products formulated for aftercare between appointments, addressing concerns such as ingrown hairs, irritation, friction, and sensitivity common with various hair removal methods. Clients with sensitive skin or oily skin are advised to schedule a consultation to determine appropriate preparation and aftercare for their sugaring treatment. The esthetician also provides guidance on managing pain expectations, particularly for individuals new to epilation-based removal technique options.
