Janice Caine, CEO of Custom College Visits, has released a new ebook that offers parents tips to negotiate the daunting college tour maze. College Road Trips, A Parent's Guide: How to organize your teen's college visits without losing your mind is a user-friendly handbook that shows parents how to cut through the hassle, headaches and time-wasting to create logical, straightforward college visit itineraries and on-campus schedules.

The book provides separate chapters discussing the vital details that need to be attended to before departure—everything from setting on-campus appointments with faculty members and current students to determining the travel route and coordinating travel logistics.

Ms. Caine brings her personal experiences as a parent together with her business skills as a college consultant and former meeting and travel planner to guide parents through the dizzying research and frenzy of planning college visits—with the goal of helping them target and visit schools up close so they can provide their teen with the information needed to make informed decisions.

Since 2009, Janice Caine has served clients from all regions of the United States as well as those from overseas. She has planned hundreds of customized itineraries that have varied in length from four days to three weeks. On why she felt it was important to publish this guidebook she states, "After more than six years of working with parents seeking guidance for planning these parent-teen road trips, I realized I could help many more families by laying out the groundwork that will make the process easier."

The ebook is available in Kindle format for $2.99 at Amazon. For information about Custom College Visits, parents can visit the website at Custom College Visits or call (800) 930-1701 or (650) 931-4515.
