

The Disability Guys Launches Disability Law Resource Website

September 16, 2026

City of White Plains, New York - September 16, 2026 -

The Disability Guys, also known as Markhoff & Mittman, P.C., has launched a rebuilt website and expanded online resource library covering disability law and related legal processes. Announced July 30, 2026, the update originates from the firm's White Plains headquarters and reorganizes information concerning Social Security Disability, long-term disability, workers' compensation, and related matters into topic-based resources.

The website update changes how the firm presents legal information online, with individual sections addressing disability claims, application procedures, denials, appeals, and related questions. The Disability Guys website also identifies resources concerning workers' compensation and personal injury matters that can overlap with disability claims.

"The website was reorganized to place commonly requested legal information into a clearer structure and to make the firm's educational materials easier to locate," said Brian M. Mittman, Esq., Managing Partner of Markhoff & Mittman, P.C. The project also gives the firm a central location for publishing updates about disability and injury law.

The July launch includes a redesigned resource section containing articles and informational materials addressing legal procedures encountered by injured and disabled workers. The firm states that the resource library covers Social Security Disability Insurance matters, workers' compensation proceedings, long-term disability claims, and personal injury issues.

Social Security Disability Insurance is a federal program administered by the Social Security Administration. Applicants generally must satisfy federal requirements concerning insured status and disability, and claims may move through multiple administrative stages when an initial application does not result in an award.

The firm's disability practice includes representation involving initial Social Security Disability applications, reconsideration proceedings, administrative law judge hearings, and certain federal appeals. Its resource library organizes informational material by legal subject and includes content addressing disability conditions, claims procedures, denials, and appeals.

Long-term disability matters represent another category addressed through the updated site. These cases can involve private insurance policies and, in some circumstances, benefit plans governed by the Employee Retirement Income Security Act. The legal framework and available procedures can differ depending on the type of policy, the governing plan documents, and the basis for a benefit determination.

The Disability Guys also handles New York workers' compensation matters. Workers' compensation cases are administered through a separate state system and can involve questions regarding medical treatment, wage replacement benefits, hearings, permanent impairment, and claim resolution. Some individuals may encounter both workers' compensation and disability benefit proceedings arising from the same medical condition or period away from employment.

Markhoff & Mittman, P.C. traces its operations to 1933. The firm currently lists seven New York offices, including its White Plains headquarters at 120 Bloomingdale Road, Suite 403, along with offices in Yonkers, Manhattan, Brooklyn, Newburgh, Goshen, and Poughkeepsie.

Mittman has practiced law for more than 30 years and is admitted in New York. His listed practice areas include workers' compensation, Social Security Disability, long-term disability, and personal injury, and his professional credentials include federal practice before the U.S. District Courts for the Southern and Eastern Districts of New York.

The White Plains office serves as the firm's headquarters and supports its disability and injury practices. The firm's White Plains office page provides address, telephone, scheduling, and office-hour information for individuals seeking information about the location.

The website redevelopment forms part of the firm's ongoing publication of legal information concerning disability and workplace injury matters. Additional articles, firm announcements, and procedural resources are scheduled to be published through the website as legal developments and informational topics arise.
