Rywen Insulation Inc Highlights Crawl Space and Attic Rodent Exclusion Approach for Bay Area Homeowners

October 01, 2026

SAN LEANDRO, CA - October 01, 2026 -
Rywen Insulation Inc, a family-owned insulation and rodent exclusion contractor based in San Leandro, California, is drawing attention to an often overlooked warning sign of rodent activity in a home: compressed or damaged attic insulation. According to the company, that damage is frequently the first visible evidence that rats or mice have entered a structure, and it is the reason exclusion work so often concludes with insulation removal, sanitizing and the installation of new insulation.

Rywen Insulation Inc is a family-owned contractor serving the East Bay from its base in San Leandro, California. The company specializes in structural rodent exclusion and in the insulation restoration that commonly follows it, with crews handling inspection, sealing, cleanup and insulation under one roof.

The Rywen Insulation rodent proofing process begins with a free inspection of the attic and crawl space, including photo documentation of every active and potential entry point. In the company's experience, those openings tend to cluster at the roofline, fascia, open roof returns, soffits, gable and dormer vents, the chimney chase, foundation vents, crawl space access openings, the garage door perimeter, and pipe, cable and duct penetrations. Each opening is sealed with galvanized steel mesh, sheet metal and rodent-rated materials.

Once the structure is sealed, contaminated insulation is removed and affected surfaces are sanitized. New insulation is installed only after the exclusion work is confirmed. The crew then returns about one week later to verify there is no further activity. The company offers same-day written estimates and performs all work with in-house crews rather than subcontractors.

"Homeowners usually call because they hear noises overhead, but by the time they look, the insulation is already flattened and soiled," said Roni Galicia, Owner of Rywen Insulation Inc. "That is why sealing the building envelope and restoring the insulation go together. Closing the entry points keeps rodents out, and replacing the damaged material brings the attic or crawl space back to the condition it should be in."

Rywen is a structural exclusion company, not a pest control company. The company focuses on sealing the building to keep animals from entering, and it does not use poison, bait stations or traps.

"The goal is a home that stays sealed, not a cycle of repeat visits," Galicia said. "When the inspection is thorough and every penetration is addressed, the follow-up visit is really just confirmation that the work has held."

Alongside rodent proofing, Rywen Insulation Inc offers attic cleaning and sanitizing, insulation removal, attic insulation, crawl space insulation, crawl space encapsulation, and crawl space moisture barrier and vapor barrier installation. These services often accompany exclusion work when insulation has been compromised or when moisture has affected a crawl space.

Rywen Insulation Inc provides rodent proofing and rodent exclusion for homeowners in San Leandro, Oakland, Berkeley, Alameda, Hayward, Castro Valley and across the East Bay. The company can be reached at Rywen Insulation Inc, 456 Hester St, San Leandro, California 94577, (415) 770-0342, rywenusa.com. Rywen operates under California contractor license #1140414 (C-2 Insulation).
