

Longmont Braces Continues Offering Orthodontic Consultations for Children, Teens, and Adults

September 18, 2026

LONGMONT, CO - September 18, 2026 -

Longmont Braces has reaffirmed its ongoing availability of orthodontic consultations for children, teens, and adults throughout the Longmont, Colorado community. The practice, led by Dr. Stephanie Ross and Dr. Aden Peterson, uses these initial appointments to help patients and families understand alignment or bite concerns and to explore the treatment options that may be appropriate for each individual.

An orthodontic consultation serves as the starting point for patients considering treatment. During these appointments, the practice reviews each patient's alignment and bite, discusses any specific concerns, and identifies individual treatment needs. Patients and families also receive an overview of appropriate treatment options and a clearer picture of possible next steps, allowing them to make informed decisions about their orthodontic care.

Each consultation gives the practice the opportunity to evaluate a patient's individual circumstances. Recommendations are developed based on clinical needs as well as personal treatment goals, recognizing that no two patients present with the same situation. This individualized approach guides the direction of any treatment plan that may follow.

Longmont Braces offers a range of orthodontic treatment options to accommodate different ages, goals, and lifestyles. These include traditional braces and Invisalign clear aligners, along with additional services such as dentofacial orthopedics, two-phase treatment, and other clinical approaches. The consultation process helps determine which of these options aligns with a patient's needs rather than presenting a single predetermined path.

"An initial consultation is often the most important step in a patient's orthodontic experience," said Dr. Stephanie Ross of Longmont Braces. "It allows families to ask questions, understand what is happening with alignment or bite, and learn about the options available to them. The goal is to give each patient the information needed to move forward with confidence."

The practice notes that consultations are available to a broad range of patients, including younger children who may benefit from early evaluation, teens considering treatment, and adults seeking orthodontic care later in life. Early evaluation can help identify developing concerns, while consultations for adults address alignment and bite matters that may have gone untreated in earlier years.

Dr. Ross added that the consultation is also an opportunity for the practice to understand what each patient hopes to accomplish. "Personal goals matter as much as clinical findings," she said. "When patients share what they are looking to achieve, treatment recommendations can be shaped around both their health and their expectations."

Longmont Braces remains based in Longmont, Colorado, and continues to serve families and individuals across the surrounding community. The practice emphasizes individualized care and works to make orthodontic evaluations accessible to those considering treatment for themselves or their children.
