Azalea Hospitality Highlights New Tiger Woods Course Ahead of 2027 Masters Tickets Demand

October 19, 2026

AUGUSTA, GA - October 19, 2026 -
Azalea Hospitality has turned attention to a significant addition to the golf experience surrounding the 2027 Masters Tournament, as visitors preparing to travel to Augusta will find a new nine-hole short course available at the city's municipal facility. The course, known as The Loop at The Patch, was designed by Tiger Woods' TGR Design and sits at Augusta's city-owned golf course, offering an additional draw for those planning their visit around the championship week.

The Loop was conceived as a short course suited to golfers of all skill levels, extending the recreational options available to the many travelers who descend on Augusta each spring. For visitors coordinating their plans, the addition represents one more reason to spend extended time in the region during the tournament, and Azalea Hospitality has incorporated awareness of the new course into its planning resources for clients seeking masters tickets and related travel arrangements.

Azalea Hospitality provides ticketing and hospitality services for major golf events, and the company reports growing interest in packages tied to the 2027 edition of the tournament. Options range from ticket-only arrangements to VIP hospitality and private housing packages, reflecting the varied needs of domestic and international travelers.

"The arrival of The Loop at The Patch gives golf enthusiasts another meaningful experience during their time in Augusta," said a spokesperson for Azalea Hospitality. "Many travelers build an entire week around the tournament, and a Tiger Woods-designed short course that welcomes players of every ability adds real depth to what the city offers beyond the main event."

The Masters Tournament is held annually at Augusta National Golf Club in Augusta, Georgia, and remains one of the most anticipated dates on the professional golf calendar. Its history, traditions, and distinctive format continue to attract spectators from around the world, many of whom plan their trips well in advance due to limited availability.

In addition to the Masters, Azalea Hospitality supports attendance at other championships, including the PGA Championship, The Open, and The Ryder Cup. The company also offers services designed to support the full visitor experience, including valet parking, transportation, and tour operator packages. A dedicated program allows ticket holders to sell their passes, with the company managing the process on their behalf.

"Demand for a us masters ticket tends to build steadily as the tournament approaches, and developments like the new short course only add to the appeal of the destination," the spokesperson added. "The goal is to help visitors make the most of their time in Augusta."

The company also maintains a collection of golf memorabilia, including a 1934 Masters Tournament badge from the inaugural event.

Azalea Hospitality is a provider of ticketing and hospitality services for major golf events, with a primary focus on the Masters Tournament in Augusta, Georgia. The company arranges ticket packages, accommodations, transportation, and related services for domestic and international clients. Azalea Hospitality is not officially affiliated with the Masters Tournament, Augusta National Golf Club, or Augusta National, Inc.
