

Pleasant Vine Home Care Celebrates 10 Years of Serving Families

September 18, 2026

NORRISTOWN, PA - September 18, 2026 -

Pleasant Vine Home Care is celebrating its 10th anniversary this September, marking a decade of providing non-medical home care and support to seniors, adults, and families. Since its founding in 2016, the company has focused on helping individuals remain in familiar surroundings while receiving assistance tailored to their daily needs, routines, and personal preferences.

Over the past decade, Pleasant Vine Home Care has worked with families navigating a wide range of circumstances, including aging in place, changes in mobility, increasing care needs, family caregiver responsibilities, and the transition home following hospitalization or rehabilitation.

Originally established in Pennsylvania, Pleasant Vine Home Care has continued to grow its reach and now also serves families in Delaware. The company expanded into Delaware approximately two years ago and currently provides home care services to families throughout New Castle County.

The 10-year anniversary represents more than the passage of time for the company. It also reflects the relationships that have developed between caregivers, clients, and families over the years. Home care often becomes necessary during periods of significant change in a family's life, when an aging parent or loved one may need more assistance than relatives can provide alone.

Pleasant Vine Home Care's role has been to help families explore care options while supporting individuals who want to maintain as much comfort, familiarity, and independence as possible.

"Reaching our 10-year anniversary is meaningful because every year represents families who trusted us to come into their homes and help care for someone important to them," said a representative of Pleasant Vine Home Care. "Home care is very personal. Families are not simply looking for a service. They are looking for people they can depend on, people who will listen, and people who will treat their loved ones with dignity and respect. We are grateful for the opportunity to have served families over the past decade, and we look forward to continuing that work in the years ahead."

Pleasant Vine Home Care provides non-medical services that can help individuals with everyday activities and companionship while allowing them to remain at home. Depending on a person's needs, assistance may include personal care, companionship, respite support, senior home care, dementia care support, and aging-in-place assistance. Care plans can be structured around the individual rather than requiring families to fit their circumstances into a single predetermined approach.

For many families, the need for home care does not begin with one dramatic event. Changes may occur gradually. An adult child may notice that a parent is having greater difficulty preparing meals, maintaining personal routines, moving safely around the home, or keeping up with household responsibilities.

A senior who previously managed independently may begin spending more time alone and benefit from companionship and regular assistance. In other situations, a spouse or adult child may have become the primary caregiver and simply need additional help.

Those situations are among the reasons Pleasant Vine Home Care has continued to emphasize individualized support throughout its first decade in business. A family caring for a parent who lives alone, for example, may need help for only certain parts of the week. Another family may be trying to coordinate support for a loved one after a hospital stay. Someone caring for a spouse with memory concerns may need periodic respite so the family caregiver can rest, work, attend appointments, or manage other responsibilities.

As Pleasant Vine Home Care enters its second decade, the company is also expanding its educational outreach to families researching senior care options.

As part of that effort, Pleasant Vine recently introduced DelawareHomeCareGuide.com, an online resource created specifically to help Delaware families learn more about home care, aging in place, caregiving, and senior support resources.

The website includes educational articles addressing topics that commonly arise when families begin evaluating care. Visitors can learn about signs that an aging parent may benefit from additional help, differences between home care and assisted living, caregiver burnout, companion care, respite care, preparing a home for aging in place, and other issues associated with caring for an older family member.

Local resource pages currently provide additional information for Wilmington, Newark, and Bear, Delaware, with information intended to help families understand both home care options and community resources available in New Castle County. The website also directs visitors to independent organizations and programs that may be useful to seniors and caregivers.

The development of the Delaware resource site reflects Pleasant Vine Home Care's broader goal of helping families become better informed before making decisions about care. The company recognizes that some visitors may be researching options long before they are ready to hire a home care provider. Others may simply be trying to understand whether professional home care is appropriate for their circumstances.

"After ten years, one of the things we have learned is that families often need information before they need care," the company representative added. "Sometimes people know that something has changed with a parent, but they are not sure what the next step should be. We want families to be able to ask questions, learn about their options, and make decisions without feeling pressured."

The anniversary also provides an opportunity for Pleasant Vine Home Care to recognize the caregivers and families who have contributed to the company's history. Caregiving takes place largely outside of public view, inside homes and within families. The work can involve routine daily assistance, conversation, encouragement, meal preparation, companionship, and simply being present when someone needs additional support.

For an older adult who wants to remain in the home where he or she has lived for many years, those forms of assistance can have significant personal value. For relatives balancing caregiving with careers, children, and other responsibilities, additional support can help make an otherwise difficult situation more manageable.

Reaching the 10-year milestone also gives Pleasant Vine Home Care an opportunity to reflect on how the needs of families have changed over time. More families are seeking ways to help aging relatives remain at home while maintaining their independence for as long as possible. Others are looking for assistance that can complement the care already being provided by spouses, adult children, relatives, and healthcare professionals.

Pleasant Vine Home Care seeks to meet those needs by providing flexible, individualized non-medical support based on each family's circumstances.

As the company begins its second decade, Pleasant Vine Home Care plans to continue serving families in the communities where it operates while developing additional educational resources for seniors, caregivers, and families.

In Delaware, Pleasant Vine Home Care maintains an office at 3200 Concord Pike, Suite 105, Wilmington, Delaware, and serves families throughout New Castle County.

Families who are beginning to explore home care for a parent, spouse, or other loved one can contact Pleasant Vine Home Care to discuss their situation and learn more about available non-medical care options. Delaware families can also access educational information about home care, aging in place, caregiving, and senior resources through DelawareHomeCareGuide.com.
