

World of Wonder Childcare Center CEO to Present at 2026 NJAEYC Annual Conference

September 18, 2026

Hoboken, New Jersey - September 18, 2026 -

World of Wonder Childcare Center has announced that Chief Executive Officer Diane Branco will present at the 2026 New Jersey Association for the Education of Young Children Annual Conference. The session, titled "From First Impression to Lasting Legacy," is scheduled for October 9, 2026, at the APA Hotel Woodbridge as part of a one-day gathering of early childhood professionals from across the state.

The conference theme is "Rooted in Strength. Rising in Purpose." The event is organized as a professional development day focused on practice, connections among educators, and the broader early childhood community in New Jersey. Branco's presentation places the center's leadership work in that statewide setting rather than in a classroom-only context.

Diane Branco, CEO, stated, "The session is an opportunity to share what first impressions mean in early childhood settings and how those early interactions can shape a longer relationship with families and staff. The conference brings together people who work with young children every day, and that exchange matters."

World of Wonder Childcare Center operates infant, pre-toddler, toddler, and Intermediate Pre-K classrooms in Hoboken and Jersey City. The organization also maintains aftercare, backup care, and seasonal camp programs for school-age children. Branco's appearance at the NJAEYC conference is separate from day-to-day enrollment activity and is framed as a professional contribution to the field rather than a program launch.

The presentation title highlights two related ideas found in the center's public materials: how families initially discover a program and what impacts remain after children leave. Parent testimonials published on the organization's website describe long tenures, including children who began in infant rooms and later returned for camp after leaving for preschool. Those accounts are individual statements, not survey results, but they align with the continuity language in the session title.

Branco added, "Early childhood work is built on daily practice. This conference is important and useful because it asks educators to step back and look at that practice with colleagues from other programs."

NJAEYC is the New Jersey affiliate of the National Association for the Education of Young Children. Its annual conference is a standing professional event for teachers, directors, and other practitioners. Participation by a center leader is a news development because it places a local operator on a statewide agenda with a named session and date. The October 9 schedule gives educators a fixed point on the calendar for the presentation.

The center's public description of its work emphasizes bilingual English and Spanish exposure, year-round operations with limited holiday closures, and a focus on children from six weeks through Intermediate Pre-K before many families transition into public pre-K. Those operational details provide context for why a session on first impressions and lasting relationships would be relevant to an early childhood audience.

By placing a named session on a statewide conference agenda, the organization is participating in the professional conversation that surrounds licensed child care in New Jersey. The October date, venue, and session title distinguish this announcement from routine program descriptions.

World of Wonder Childcare Center provides early childhood programs for infants through Intermediate Pre-K, as well as school-age aftercare, backup care, and seasonal camp offerings. They've been recognized as a "Best of Hoboken" selection in community voting in both 2021 and 2022. Diane Branco leads the organization, which serves families in Hoboken and Jersey City through a model that combines daily classroom practice with participation in the wider early childhood field.
