

ARS Landscape Materials and Supply Expands Delivery Area

September 24, 2026

ARVADA, CO - September 24, 2026 -

ARS Landscape Materials and Supply announced an expansion of its bulk landscape material delivery service into Boulder County, effective August 1, 2026. The Arvada-based supplier will now deliver to Louisville, Lafayette, Erie, and Boulder. The expansion extends a footprint that has centered on the northwest Denver metro area, reaching north and west along the U.S. 36 corridor.

ARS delivers soil, compost, mulch, decorative rock, sand, and stone by the cubic yard to residential and commercial properties, setting each load at a point the customer chooses on the property. Customers may also load at the company's Arvada yard. Deliveries are scheduled by phone or through the company's online ordering site.

"Have come here for all our landscaping and it's been great. High quality product! Super friendly staff, quick and efficient! Their new e-commerce site is just the cherry on top!" one customer wrote in a Google review of the company.

The company said the expansion responds to requests from existing customers in the area.

"We've received a considerable amount of feedback from our customers in Boulder County. Obviously, we're going to increase service options where it makes the most sense," said Rina Bindi, Owner of ARS Landscape Materials and Supply.

According to ARS, much of its Boulder County demand comes from newly built homes, where construction often leaves compacted subsoil with little usable topsoil.

Colorado State University Extension describes Front Range soils as predominantly clay-based and alkaline, conditions that affect drainage, root development, and nutrient availability. ARS says landscape contractors on new-build properties typically order soil amendment by the yard before planting begins.

Among the materials now available in the expanded area is the company's garden mix, a composted soil blend. ARS says it composts the mix for three full years before sale, that the extended period stabilizes the organic material, and that the blend can be planted into directly without further amendment. Other delivered materials include topsoil, compost, mulch, river rock, sand, crusher fines, and road base.

The online catalog lists more than 30 products along with edging supplies. Contractor accounts and wholesale terms are available for volume orders, and neither the catalog nor the account terms change with the expansion.

Customers in the newly added communities can order through the online portal ARS launched in May 2026, which covers the company's soil, rock, sand, stone, and mulch categories. Before the portal, every order was arranged by phone or email with staff at the Arvada yard. The company's website also publishes a price list and a materials calculator that estimates how much soil, rock, mulch, or stone a given area will require.

According to ARS, using the three together lets a customer work out quantities, check pricing, and place an order in a single visit, reducing the back-and-forth that bulk orders have typically involved.

"Getting the quantity right matters more with bulk material than with bagged product," commented Bindi.

One cubic yard covers roughly 108 square feet at a depth of three inches, so a measuring error of a few feet across a large bed or new lawn can mean ordering a second delivery or leaving a surplus pile in the driveway. For homeowners in Boulder County ordering from ARS for the first time, the calculator offers a way to size an order before the truck is scheduled.

The company said it adds communities that sit near its existing delivery routes, and that further additions will depend on order volume in the newly added areas. The Boulder County expansion builds on the company's addition of Superior earlier in 2026.

Delivery details for the Boulder market are available on the ARS website.
