

Gorilla Kleen Releases Guide Explaining the Time to Pressure Wash a House

September 28, 2026

SARASOTA, FL - September 28, 2026 -

Gorilla Kleen, a pressure washing company based in Lakewood Ranch, Florida, has published a new guide designed to help Florida homeowners understand realistic timelines for cleaning their property exteriors. The guide addresses one of the questions the company hears most often from residents and provides a breakdown of the factors that influence each job.

The resource walks readers through the variables that determine project length, including the size of the home, the number of surfaces requiring attention, the degree of buildup, and local weather conditions. According to the guide, a single-story home under 2,500 square feet typically takes a professional crew between one and three hours to complete. A full property wash that includes the roof, driveway, and pool cage can require four to eight hours.

The question of how long does it take to pressure wash a house often produces uncertain answers because timelines vary widely from one property to the next. The guide aims to remove that uncertainty by setting clear expectations for both professionally handled and do-it-yourself projects. It notes that homeowners tackling the work themselves generally spend two to three times longer than a trained crew, largely due to equipment limitations and the need to adjust pressure settings surface by surface.

"Homeowners deserve straight answers before scheduling any exterior cleaning work," said John McLoud of Gorilla Kleen. "The purpose of this guide is to give Florida residents a clear sense of what to expect, so they can plan their day and understand why certain surfaces take longer than others."

The guide also explains how multi-surface jobs are sequenced. A typical approach moves from top to bottom and from the least delicate surfaces to the most delicate, which helps prevent rework and protects sensitive materials. This context is intended to help homeowners understand the reasoning behind a professional crew's workflow rather than simply providing a single estimate.

A frequently asked questions section addresses common inquiries, such as the time required to clean a 2,500 square foot house, whether a home and driveway can be washed on the same day, and how long to wait before certain follow-up tasks. The company drew on years of field experience across the Sarasota region to compile the answers.

"The difference between a professional job and a weekend project usually comes down to equipment flow rate, technique, and crew size," McLoud added. "Understanding those factors helps homeowners make informed decisions about their exterior maintenance."

Gorilla Kleen is a locally owned pressure washing company serving residential and commercial properties throughout the Lakewood Ranch and Sarasota area of Florida.
