Farence Fencing Announces 10-Year Warranty on Wood Fencing

October 06, 2026

JACKSONVILLE, FL - October 06, 2026 -
Homeowners across Northeast Florida who want a custom-built wood fence, rather than a standard pre-built panel style, often find few local contractors willing to take on the work. Farence Fencing, a Jacksonville-based fencing contractor, today announced that every custom wood fence it installs carries a 10-year workmanship warranty, well beyond the one-year term the company says is typical among area fence installers.

Founded in 2021, Farence Fencing has built its reputation on wood fence designs that combine multiple board widths and styles in a single fence line, work that some competing contractors decline to quote. Owner Steven Farence said the company has taken on jobs specifically because another installer turned the homeowner away for wanting something outside a standard panel design. Every fence is built board by board on-site rather than assembled from pre-built panel sections, which allows for the mixed dimensions and detailing that a stick-built approach makes possible. A typical custom design might pair wider privacy boards along the bottom of the fence with narrower, spaced boards near the top for a partial view, a combination that few pre-built panel systems can replicate.

The company is insured and has served the Jacksonville area since 2021, with a service area that stretches from Fernandina Beach south to Palm Valley and west through Callahan and the Interstate 10 corridor. The company holds an A+ rating from the Better Business Bureau for Northeast Florida and the Southeast Atlantic, along with a 4.9-star average across 107 Google reviews. Florida does not require a state license for fence contracting, so homeowners comparing bids are left weighing insurance coverage and review history instead of a license number.

Every wood fence Farence Fencing installs includes steel posts and a welded, galvanized steel-frame gate, meaning the steel is coated in zinc to resist rust, rather than a gate built from wood alone. Steel framing keeps a gate from sagging, twisting or warping over time, which the company said is one of the more common failure points on wood fences with wood-only gate frames. The 10-year workmanship warranty covers post movement caused by improperly packed post holes and any gate sag or twist tied to installation quality. It does not cover the wood itself warping or weathering with age, which the company said is a natural process no installation method fully prevents.

In the Jacksonville market, Farence Fencing has built a name for its wood fencing work, and Farence said many customers come to the company after being told no elsewhere for a design outside a standard panel style. The company is family-owned and operated, a detail several customers cite in reviews on the company's Google Business Profile as a reason they chose it over larger competitors. Taking on more complex builds means pricing and constructing each job individually instead of quoting from a standard panel catalog, according to Farence.

"Wood is going to do what wood does over time, and it will eventually need some attention no matter who installs it," said Steven Farence, owner of Farence Fencing. "What we can control is the install: whether the posts and the gate framing were done right the first time. That's what our warranty covers."

Photos and homeowner feedback from past wood fencing projects are visible on the company's Google Business Profile, which homeowners can browse before requesting a quote. For a custom wood fencing estimate, homeowners can call Farence Fencing at (904) 719-3715 or visit www.farencefencing.com.
