

PA Nursing Home Lawyers Personal Injury Attorney Moves Office

September 24, 2026

PHILADELPHIA, PA - September 24, 2026 -

PA Nursing Home Lawyers, a personal injury law firm handling nursing home and elder abuse matters, has moved its Philadelphia office from 1800 John F. Kennedy Boulevard to 1650 Arch Street, Suite 2502. The relocation provides the firm with a new operating location for its legal practice and ongoing case administration.

The firm is now conducting operations from 1650 Arch Street, Suite 2502, Philadelphia, PA 19103. The relocation represents an operational change for the practice rather than a change in its principal areas of legal work.

"The move establishes a new office location for the firm while its attorneys continue handling the same categories of personal injury and elder care matters," said Leonard P. Haberman, Esq., principal attorney at PA Nursing Home Lawyers. "The firm has updated its office information so that current case administration and future communications can be directed through the Arch Street location."

PA Nursing Home Lawyers handles personal injury matters involving allegations of nursing home abuse and neglect, elder abuse and neglect, and injuries arising from slip-and-fall incidents. The practice examines the circumstances surrounding reported injuries and evaluates potential civil claims according to the facts of individual matters and applicable Pennsylvania law.

Nursing home abuse and neglect cases can involve allegations concerning the care provided to residents in long-term care settings. Legal review of these matters may involve medical documentation, facility records, incident reports, witness information, and other materials relevant to the circumstances surrounding an injury or reported event. The specific evidence involved varies according to the facts and procedural status of each matter.

Elder abuse and neglect matters can arise in residential care facilities and other settings where older adults depend on individuals or organizations for assistance. Such cases may involve allegations concerning physical injuries, inadequate supervision, neglect, or other conduct affecting an older adult. PA Nursing Home Lawyers reviews available records and circumstances to determine which legal issues may apply to an individual matter.

The firm also handles slip-and-fall matters as part of its personal injury practice. These cases generally require an examination of the location and circumstances of a fall, the condition that allegedly contributed to the incident, available notice information, and documentation concerning resulting injuries. Property records, photographs, incident reports, medical records, and witness accounts can become relevant depending on the circumstances.

Personal injury litigation involves procedural requirements that differ according to the nature of a claim. Attorneys may review records, communicate with involved parties, examine applicable legal standards, and prepare filings when litigation is pursued. Information about the firm's practice areas and legal work is available through its website.

The office relocation does not change the firm's publicly listed telephone number. PA Nursing Home Lawyers can continue to be reached at (215) 240-7771, while correspondence and office-related matters can be directed to the new Arch Street address.

The move also requires updates to the firm's published business information and communications materials. Accurate office information is relevant to correspondence, case documents, meetings, and administrative records associated with an active legal practice. The Arch Street suite now serves as the firm's listed office for these functions.

PA Nursing Home Lawyers operates as a legal practice focused on personal injury matters, including cases connected with nursing homes and the treatment of older adults. Leonard P. Haberman, Esq. serves as principal attorney and oversees the firm's legal work from the new office location.

The firm's nursing home practice addresses civil matters involving allegations of abuse or neglect rather than providing medical assessments of injuries or care. Legal claims depend on individual facts, available evidence, applicable statutes, and other requirements governing civil actions. The firm evaluates these factors as part of its legal review process.

The relocation is the current business development being announced by PA Nursing Home Lawyers and establishes 1650 Arch Street, Suite 2502 as its updated office address. The firm's practice areas remain centered on personal injury, nursing home abuse and neglect, elder abuse and neglect, and slip-and-fall matters.

Additional information about PA Nursing Home Lawyers, its practice areas, and its updated contact information can be found through the firm's official online resources. For more information, contact the office at (215) 240-7771.
