

Danville Music Announces In-House Instrument Repair Danville Services with Free Lifetime Adjustments

October 27, 2026

Danville, California - October 27, 2026 -
Danville Music, a full-service musical instrument store, lesson studio, and repair shop founded in 1989, is drawing attention to its in-house instrument repair services as families and student musicians prepare their gear for the back-to-school season. The store, located at 115 Town and Country Drive, Suite E in Danville, California, employs experienced luthiers who handle repairs on-site and provide free lifetime adjustments on instruments purchased from the store.

The repair program addresses a common seasonal concern for school music participants, whose instruments often require setup work, adjustments, and maintenance before the academic year begins. Rather than sending instruments to outside facilities, Danville Music completes repair work within its own shop, allowing its staff to inspect, adjust, and service a range of instruments brought in by students, parents, and performing musicians throughout the Tri-Valley region.

The free lifetime adjustment policy applies to instruments bought at the store, meaning customers can return for ongoing setup and maintenance as an instrument settles, ages, or responds to seasonal changes in temperature and humidity. According to the store, this arrangement is intended to keep student and professional instruments playable over the long term without recurring adjustment costs.

"Our luthiers see a steady increase in repair and setup requests each fall as students return to band and orchestra programs," said Adam Schuman, co-owner of Danville Music. "Keeping instrument repair work in-house lets the team catch issues early and keep a young musician playing without long delays. The free lifetime adjustments on instruments purchased here reflect how the store thinks about the full life of an instrument, not just the day it leaves the shop."

The repair services operate alongside the store's other core offerings. Danville Music lessons in Danville cover guitar, piano, and band and orchestral instruments, with a teaching staff working out of its on-site lesson studio. The store also rents and sells band and orchestra instruments, including a full Yamaha line available to rent or buy, which supports families enrolling children in school music programs.

Schuman noted that the combination of sales, rentals, lessons, and repair under one roof is relevant during the enrollment period. "A family can rent or purchase an instrument, arrange lessons, and have that same instrument serviced here when it needs attention," he said. "Having everything in one place reduces the back-and-forth for parents during a busy time of year."

Danville Music, online at danvillemusic.com and based in Danville, California, serves musicians in Danville, San Ramon, Walnut Creek, Pleasanton, and surrounding communities, and supports school music programs throughout the Tri-Valley.

Founded in 1989 and owned by Adam Schuman and Cameron Brochier, Danville Music operates as a musical instrument store, lesson studio, and repair shop in the San Francisco Bay Area. The store sells electric and acoustic guitars, basses, amps, effects, drums, ukuleles, microphones, band and orchestra instruments, and accessories from a wide range of brands. In addition to sales, the store offers instrument rentals, private lessons, and in-house repair services performed by experienced luthiers.
