

Longmont Braces Highlights Ongoing Patient Care and Individualized Orthodontic Treatment Planning

October 01, 2026

LONGMONT, CO - October 01, 2026 -

Longmont Braces has outlined its continued emphasis on supporting patients at every stage of the orthodontic care process, reinforcing an approach that treats treatment as an ongoing relationship rather than a single decision made at the outset. The practice, led by Dr. Stephanie Ross and Dr. Aden Peterson, serves children, teens, and adults across the Longmont, Colorado community.

According to the practice, orthodontic care extends well beyond the selection of an initial treatment option. Once a patient begins treatment, whether with braces or Invisalign clear aligners, the work of the orthodontic team continues through regular monitoring, communication about progress, and adjustments to care as circumstances change. This sustained interaction between patient and provider forms the foundation of how the Longmont-based practice approaches each case.

Individualized treatment planning remains central to that process. Each patient begins with an assessment that shapes a plan tailored to their specific needs, age, and goals. As treatment advances, the team monitors results and modifies recommendations to keep progress on track. The practice notes that this attention applies equally to younger patients undergoing early intervention and to adults who have increasingly pursued orthodontic treatment in recent years.

Patient education is another element the practice describes as essential throughout treatment. Longmont Braces places emphasis on helping patients understand their treatment recommendations, the reasoning behind them, and the responsibilities they carry during care. For younger patients, that often includes involving parents in conversations about expectations and daily routines. For teens and adults, it involves clear explanations of how consistency at home affects outcomes.

"Communication is a defining part of successful orthodontic treatment," said Dr. Stephanie Ross of Longmont Braces. "Selecting a treatment option is only the beginning. What follows matters just as much, and that means keeping patients informed about their progress, monitoring their results closely, and adjusting the plan when needed. Every patient is different, and individualized attention throughout the entire process is what allows treatment to stay on course."

The practice offers a full range of orthodontic services, including traditional metal and clear braces, Invisalign clear aligner therapy, dentofacial orthopedics, surgical orthodontics, two-phase treatment, and temporary anchorage devices. It also provides emergency orthodontic care for existing patients who encounter urgent issues during their treatment.

Orthodontic providers across Colorado have observed growing interest in treatment among adults, a trend attributed in part to the availability of more discreet options. Longmont Braces reports that this shift has reinforced the importance of thorough treatment planning sessions and dedicated time spent educating patients about their choices before and during care.
