

Next Level Decks and Exteriors Helps Homeowners Build Weather-Ready Outdoor Living Spaces for the Pacific Northwest

September 29, 2026

Tigard, Oregon - September 29, 2026 -

Next Level Decks and Exteriors, a Tigard-based exterior contracting company serving the Portland metro area and Southwest Washington, is helping homeowners convert underused outdoor spaces into durable living areas engineered specifically for the region's wet and variable climate.

The Pacific Northwest presents distinct challenges for outdoor structures, including sustained rainfall, seasonal temperature swings, and conditions that can accelerate dry rot in unprotected wood. In response, the company is focusing its deck construction, patio cover, and pergola work on materials and building techniques selected to withstand these regional demands. The approach is intended to extend the usable life of outdoor spaces while reducing long-term maintenance for property owners across Oregon and Washington.

The company's services span deck building and resurfacing, patio cover and enclosure installation, fence construction and repair, pergola building, siding installation, and dry rot repair. Each project begins with a free estimate and an estimated timeline, and the firm provides a limited lifetime warranty on completed work.

"Homeowners in this part of the country often have yards and patios that sit unused for much of the year because they were not built for the weather here," said Michael, spokesperson of Next Level Decks and Exteriors. "The goal is to design and construct spaces that hold up to the rain and the seasonal shifts, so families can actually spend time outdoors without worrying about what the climate is doing to the structure."

Deck resurfacing has become a particular area of focus for the firm, offering an alternative to full replacement for structures with sound framing but worn surfaces. The company reports that resurfacing existing decks with updated materials allows homeowners to refresh outdoor areas while preserving the underlying structure where it remains viable.

Siding installation and dry rot repair round out the exterior work, addressing moisture-related damage that is common in the region. The company works with cedar, vinyl, and Hardie Plank siding, and treats dry rot repair as a means of restoring structural integrity and preventing further deterioration.

"A weather-ready exterior is about more than appearance," Michael said. "When the materials and construction are matched to the environment, the result is an outdoor space that stays functional and safe over time, which is what most homeowners here are looking for."

The company emphasizes a transparent and collaborative process, with project management intended to minimize disruption to daily routines during construction. Attention to scheduling and property care is part of how the firm approaches each job, from initial consultation through completion.

Next Level Decks and Exteriors serves Tigard, Beaverton, Portland, Lake Oswego, Tualatin, Oregon City, and the greater Multnomah County area, along with Vancouver and surrounding communities in Southwest Washington.
