September 28, 2026

September 28, 2026 -

Aquatic Attorneys ? The Haggard Law Firm has announced expanded Arizona-focused information concerning pool drowning and aquatic injury claims, providing details about civil liability and the process used to handle these matters in association with locally licensed counsel. The September 2026 update addresses legal issues that can arise after fatal and nonfatal drowning incidents while explaining the firm?s multistate representation structure.

?Drowning cases require a detailed review of the circumstances surrounding the incident, including the property, equipment, supervision, and applicable safety requirements,? said Michael Haggard, Esq., Managing Partner of The Haggard Law Firm. ?The Arizona information was developed to explain the legal framework involved in these cases and how our firm works with local counsel when handling matters outside Florida.?

The Aquatic Attorneys practice addresses civil matters involving drownings, near-drownings, suction entrapment, wrongful death, premises liability, and other aquatic incidents. The practice operates as part of The Haggard Law Firm, which was established in 1972 and is headquartered in Florida. The firm handles aquatic injury matters in multiple jurisdictions through local counsel and applicable court admission procedures.

Pool drowning litigation can involve several areas of civil law depending on where and how an incident occurred. A case may require examination of property conditions, swimming pool barriers, gates, drains, pumps, warning systems, supervision practices, maintenance records, or other circumstances associated with the aquatic environment. The facts determine which individuals, businesses, property operators, manufacturers, or other entities may become part of a legal review.

Arizona matters present jurisdiction-specific considerations because state law governs issues such as filing deadlines, liability standards, damages, and court procedure. Aquatic Attorneys states that its Arizona representation is conducted in association with locally licensed counsel. Michael Haggard is licensed to practice law in Florida, and representation in other jurisdictions may involve local counsel or court-approved admission where applicable.

The firm's Arizona information addresses pool and spa drowning, aquatic wrongful death, and related injury matters. The material also explains that legal deadlines vary according to the type of claim and circumstances involved. Cases involving minors, public entities, or other specific parties can involve additional procedural considerations, making the facts and jurisdiction relevant to an assessment of applicable deadlines.

Evidence in a drowning matter can come from multiple sources. Depending on the incident, attorneys may review photographs, video recordings, witness accounts, maintenance documents, inspection materials, emergency response records, equipment information, property records, and applicable safety requirements. Technical issues involving pool equipment or premises conditions can also require review by qualified professionals whose disciplines relate to the circumstances under examination.

Aquatic injury litigation can involve both fatal and nonfatal incidents. A fatal drowning may lead to a wrongful death claim when the available facts support civil liability under applicable law. A nonfatal drowning may involve medical treatment and an evaluation of injuries and damages, while suction entrapment or equipment-related incidents can raise additional questions concerning product design, maintenance, installation, or operation.

The Haggard Law Firm identifies pool drowning and drain entrapment among the categories of personal injury matters handled by the practice. Haggard's work has included litigation involving swimming pool incidents as well as participation in drowning-prevention and aquatic-safety initiatives. His practice also includes wrongful death, premises liability, products liability, and negligent security matters.

Aquatic Attorneys describes its multistate structure as a collaboration with attorneys licensed in the jurisdiction where a matter arises. This structure allows Arizona cases to include local counsel while The Haggard Law Firm participates in the aquatic-injury aspects of the litigation where permitted. Attorney licensing and court admission requirements remain subject to the rules governing each jurisdiction.

The Arizona update forms part of the practice's broader collection of information concerning aquatic injury and wrongful death matters across the United States. The materials identify state-specific pages while providing general information about the types of evidence and legal questions that can arise following drowning and other aquatic incidents.

Additional information about the firm's aquatic injury practice and areas of representation is available through its practice areas resource. The material is provided for general informational purposes, and the circumstances and legal requirements of individual matters vary by jurisdiction.
