

Sugaring Hair Removal Gains Momentum as Natural Alternative to Waxing

September 30, 2026

MISSOULA, MT - September 30, 2026 -

Honey Sugaring and Facials, a Missoula, Montana esthetic studio, has reported increased client interest in sugaring hair removal as consumers across the region seek hair removal methods built on natural ingredients rather than synthetic or resin-based formulations commonly associated with traditional waxing.

The sugaring method uses a paste composed of three ingredients ? sugar, water, and lemon juice ? with no chemical additives, dyes, or preservatives. The sugar paste is applied to the skin at body temperature and removed by hand in the direction of hair growth, a technique that distinguishes it from conventional wax hair removal. As a form of epilation, sugaring extracts hair from the follicle rather than cutting it at the surface the way shaving does. Individuals who shave typically see regrowth within days, while the sugaring process addresses body hair at the root, which may slow hair growth over repeated sessions.

The composition of the sugaring paste has remained consistent for centuries. Historical documentation cited by JAMA Dermatology traces the sugar paste method to ancient Egypt and Mesopotamia around 1900 BC, where the same combination of sugar, lemon, and water served as the standard approach to body sugaring. The simplicity of these natural ingredients is a central factor in the method's continued use, as the paste contains no petroleum-based compounds or synthetic resins found in many modern wax formulations. This ingredient profile has drawn attention from individuals with sensitive skin and various skin types who seek alternatives to conventional hair removal methods.

Market data supports the trend. According to The Business Research Company, the global sugaring hair removal market reached an estimated $3.25 billion in 2025 and is projected to grow to $3.89 billion by 2029 at a compound annual growth rate of 4.6 percent. North America represents a significant portion of this growth, with expanding spa and salon offerings that now include sugar waxing alongside laser hair removal and IPL hair removal as part of a broader shift in the beauty and self care industry toward sustainable skincare practices and natural beauty solutions.

Honey Sugaring and Facials operates from a private studio at 308 W Pine St, Suite B01, in Missoula. A licensed esthetician conducts consultations before each sugaring treatment to assess individual skin types, hair growth patterns, and sensitivity. The studio offers hair removal sugaring across a full menu of treatment areas, including eyebrow shaping, face, bikini line, full brazilian, underarms, and legs. The sugaring technique used at the studio follows the traditional hand method, sometimes referred to as sugar wax application, and does not require heat from a warming device – a distinction from hot wax methods that can contribute to burn or discomfort.

Each sugaring session includes exfoliation of the treated area, as the paste naturally exfoliates dead skin cells during removal. The studio carries sugaring products designed for aftercare between appointments, addressing common concerns such as ingrown hairs, irritation, friction, and oily skin. The esthetician provides guidance on managing pain expectations and appropriate preparation, particularly for clients new to epilation or those transitioning from other removal technique options. The sugaring method is also suitable for coarse hair, and the studio serves both women and men seeking body hair removal through sugaring. Sugaring services at the studio extend to clients seeking a skincare-forward approach to body hair management as part of a broader self care routine.
