

Summit Scapes Construction Opens Fall Clean-Up Scheduling as Established Landscaping Company

September 30, 2026

MANLIUS, NY - September 30, 2026 -

Summit Scapes Construction, a landscaping and hardscaping company serving Central New York, has opened scheduling for fall clean-up services as leaf drop begins across the region. Company guidance identifies late September and early October as the best time to schedule services.

The landscaping and hardscaping company provides both continuous and one-time fall clean-up options. Continuous service, which starts in October with visits every one to two weeks, is directed at larger yards and properties with many trees. One-time visits are scheduled later in the season, after most leaves have fallen, and are typically used on smaller lots. Work is offered for residential and commercial properties in Kirkville, Manlius, Fayetteville, and surrounding communities.

Fall clean-up includes leaf removal with professional mowers and vacuums. Debris may be hauled off-site or blown into a designated area, such as adjoining woods, depending on the layout of the property. Crews also clear sticks, clippings, and other material from lawns and plant beds so remaining turf receives sunlight and is less likely to develop dead patches over winter.

A final mow and fertilization are completed before the first frost to support spring recovery. Bushes and shrubs receive a last trim to remove dead weight before cold weather. Garden beds are cleared of dead plants, fallen leaves, and weeds, then covered with compost and mulch to insulate soil. Large fallen branches and trees can be addressed as part of the same visit when size and access allow.

Company materials note that leaves left in place can block sunlight, trap moisture, and contribute to thatch, a layer of dead organic matter that sits between soil and grass. If thatch becomes thick, water and nutrients have more difficulty reaching roots. Clearing debris in fall is also intended to reduce mold growth and ice buildup once snow arrives. Leaf work depends on dry conditions; wet weather can delay removal and shift remaining cleanup into spring.

Summit Scapes's seasonal calendar places full landscape construction from May through October, with fall cleanups and season prep beginning in mid-October and continuing into November. Snow-plowing contracts then run from November through April. Fall clean-up is positioned as the transition between the construction season and winter operations.

With 13 years of work in the area, Summit Scapes applies local knowledge of leaf-drop timing, freeze dates, and property types ranging from compact lots to large wooded yards. Full insurance coverage applies to the work. Maintenance cleanups are typically completed in about one day, though multi-visit schedules extend through the leaf season.

Fall clean-up is coordinated with other late-season tasks when requested, including shrub cutbacks already included in the standard scope. The same crews that handle weekly mowing and landscape construction during warmer months shift to seasonal cleanup as demand increases. An August hiring notice from the company listed fall cleanups among the work assigned to mowing, landscape, and construction crews.

"Late September is when we start locking in fall clean-up routes so properties can be cleared while leaves are still relatively dry," said Jared Van Der Veer, Owner of Summit Scapes Construction. "The best time to get the work done is before the ground freezes and the leaves get wet."

The landscaping and hardscaping company continues to schedule these visits on a first-available basis as the season advances. Properties with heavy tree cover are generally placed on the continuous route so successive drops can be removed before they mat down.

"Fall clean-up is the last chance to get leaves, debris, and a final trim off the property before winter weather sets in," continued Van Der Veer.
