

Dispatch Dudes Shares Bill of Lading Inspection Guidance for Door-to-Door Car Shipping Customers

October 05, 2026 -

Dispatch Dudes, a federally licensed nationwide auto transport broker, has released consumer guidance on how to inspect and complete the Bill of Lading during interstate vehicle transport, including Arizona and California car shipping. The guidance arrives as relocation and vehicle shipping volume typically rises, when more consumers encounter the document for the first time and may overlook the role it plays in protecting their vehicle.

The Bill of Lading is the inspection and condition report that a carrier and customer sign at both pickup and delivery. It records the vehicle's condition before and after transport and serves as the primary reference if a damage claim is filed. Dispatch Dudes notes that consumers who document existing scratches, dents, and mileage at pickup, and who repeat the inspection at delivery before signing, place themselves in a stronger position should a dispute occur.

According to the company, customers should photograph the vehicle from multiple angles in good lighting, confirm that any pre-existing damage is noted on the form, and avoid signing a clean delivery report until the vehicle has been examined. The guidance applies across transport methods, including open, enclosed, and door to door auto transport, where the carrier picks the vehicle up and delivers it to specified locations rather than at a terminal.

"The Bill of Lading is the single most important document in the transport process, and many consumers sign it without realizing what it protects," said Benjamin Kats, Founder and Chief Executive Officer of Dispatch Dudes. "A careful inspection at pickup and delivery takes only a few minutes, and it gives customers a clear record if anything needs to be addressed."

Dispatch Dudes operates as a broker that arranges transport through a network of vetted carriers and does not own trucks. The company reports that its carrier network carries cargo insurance ranging from 250,000 dollars to 10 million dollars, and that customers receive the assigned carrier's name, USDOT number, and insurance certificate before pickup. Customers pay no deposit until a carrier is assigned.

The company arranges Arizona auto transport as well as service across other states, and handles California car shipping for individuals, businesses, and military members relocating under permanent change of station orders. Services cover cars, motorcycles, and boats, including inoperable, classic, luxury, and modified vehicles.

Kats added that transparency extends to cost expectations. "Shipping prices vary by distance, vehicle size, transport type, and season, so customers benefit from understanding the range before they book," he said. Published estimates run roughly 700 to 1,200 dollars for 1,000 miles on open transport and 1,000 to 1,700 dollars for enclosed transport.

Dispatch Dudes is a nationwide auto transport broker headquartered in Pompano Beach, Florida, operating under USDOT 3446819 and MC-1120978. The company offers open, enclosed, expedited, and door-to-door shipping and provides instant quotes based on origin, destination, transport type, dates, and vehicle details. Dispatch Dudes was named No. 5 Best National Moving Company in Newsweek's 2026 Readers' Choice awards and holds a 4.9 rating from 473 Google reviews. Founder and Chief Executive Officer Benjamin Kats is a member of the Forbes Business Council.
