

National University - Los Angeles Highlights Flexible Degree Pathways for Working Adults

October 06, 2026

LOS ANGELES, CA - October 06, 2026 -

National University in Los Angeles has outlined an expanded focus on flexible higher education options designed to support working adults who are balancing employment, family responsibilities, and the pursuit of career advancement. The announcement reflects a growing demand among mid-career professionals for degree programs that accommodate demanding schedules while maintaining academic rigor.

As a private, non-profit educational institution based in West Los Angeles, National University - Los Angeles educational institution offers a broad portfolio of career-focused degree options across disciplines including teaching and education, business and marketing, healthcare and nursing, social sciences and psychology, engineering and technology, arts and humanities, and criminal justice and public service. These programs span associate, bachelor's, master's, and doctoral levels, along with certificates and credentials intended to align with the practical requirements of today's workforce.

The institution's approach is structured around the realities faced by adult learners who often cannot pause their careers to attend traditional on-campus programs. Course formats are designed to allow students to continue working while advancing their education, with curricula that connect academic study to professional application.

"Many adults want to advance their careers but worry that returning to school is incompatible with their work and family commitments," said a spokesperson for National University. "The programs are built around the understanding that students bring real-world experience into the classroom, and the goal is to help them translate that experience into recognized credentials and new opportunities."

Among the areas of study drawing interest is the Bachelor of Science in Information Systems, which combines technical coursework with business principles to prepare students for roles at the intersection of business and technology. Healthcare and nursing programs, business administration, data science, cybersecurity, counseling psychology, and criminal justice administration are also part of the degree catalog available to enrolled students.

The emphasis on accessibility reflects broader trends in higher education, where enrollment among adult learners and career changers has become an increasingly significant portion of the student population. Institutions that offer scheduling flexibility and career-aligned curricula are responding to the needs of individuals seeking to enter new fields, qualify for promotions, or meet professional licensing and credentialing requirements.

"Education works best when it meets people where they are," the spokesperson for National University added. "The focus remains on supporting students at every stage, whether they are starting a first degree, returning after time away, or pursuing an advanced credential to move forward in their profession."

National University also notes its standing as a veteran-friendly campus and an environment welcoming to students from diverse backgrounds, factors that contribute to its role serving the Los Angeles community and beyond.

National University is a private, non-profit educational institution located in West Los Angeles. The university provides a wide range of career-focused degree programs across fields such as education, business, healthcare, psychology, engineering, technology, the arts, and public service. Through its degree offerings at the associate, bachelor's, master's, and doctoral levels, the institution serves working adults, veterans, and traditional students seeking academic credentials aligned with professional goals.

###

For more information about National University - Los Angeles, contact the company here:National University -

Los Angeles National University (310) 662-2005 socialmedia@nu.edu National University - Los Angeles 5230
Pacific Concourse Dr #400 Los Angeles, CA 90045

National University - Los Angeles

*National University Los Angeles offers flexible degree programs, on-campus and online courses, and small class sizes.
Our student-focused approach to higher education is reflected in our four-week class format.*

Website: <https://www.nu.edu/locations/southerncalifornia/losangeles/>

Email: socialmedia@nu.edu

Phone: (310) 662-2005

