

Superior Overhead Doors Expands Garage Door Cable Repair Services in Jenks

October 17, 2026

Jenks, Oklahoma - October 17, 2026 -

Superior Overhead Doors has announced a broadened focus on garage door cable repair for homeowners and businesses across the Jenks, Oklahoma area. The locally owned company, in business since 2008, is drawing attention to cable-related failures that affect the safe and balanced operation of residential and commercial doors throughout the community.

Garage door cables work alongside the spring system to raise and lower the door in a controlled, even motion. When cables become worn, frayed, or loose, the door can lose its balance and become a safety hazard. The Superior Overhead Doors Jenks service expansion addresses this concern by placing greater emphasis on timely inspection and repair of these critical components.

According to the company, several warning signs indicate that cables may require professional attention. A door that moves unevenly or appears crooked while opening or closing often points to a cable problem. Visible wear, rust, or fraying along the cable is another common indicator, as is slack or a cable that has slipped off its drum. Doors that suddenly feel heavier or operate with a jerking motion may also signal that the cable system is no longer working as intended.

Because cables operate under significant tension, the company stresses that repairs should not be attempted without proper training and tools. Damaged cables can snap unexpectedly, creating a risk of injury and further damage to the door assembly. Professional inspection allows a trained technician to identify the underlying cause, replace affected parts, and restore the balanced operation the system depends on.

"Cables are easy to overlook because they work quietly in the background, but they carry a tremendous amount of load," said Todd Willhoite of Superior Overhead Doors. "When homeowners notice a door that tilts to one side or a cable that looks frayed, that is the moment to call a professional rather than wait for a complete failure."

Willhoite added that cable issues rarely resolve on their own. "A slack or damaged cable throws the entire door out of balance, which puts added strain on the opener and the springs," he said. "Addressing the cable early helps prevent a small problem from turning into a larger repair down the road."

As a company serving Jenks, Superior Overhead Doors responds to cable concerns using quality replacement parts and established repair techniques. With Superior Overhead Doors serving Jenks and surrounding Oklahoma communities, residents have access to technicians familiar with the local climate and the demands it places on garage door systems.
