

Aquatic Attorneys Announces Pool Drowning Legal Case Focus

October 09, 2026

October 09, 2026 -

Aquatic Attorneys announced in October 2026 that its legal team is making pool drowning case resources available for matters arising in Colorado through locally licensed counsel, as part of the firm's broader work involving aquatic injuries and wrongful death. The announcement provides information about the legal issues that can arise after fatal and nonfatal pool incidents and the types of records that may be examined when determining responsibility.

"Pool drowning cases require a detailed review of the circumstances surrounding the incident, including the property, equipment, applicable safety requirements, and available records," said Michael Haggard, Esq., managing partner of Aquatic Attorneys. "Our work focuses on examining those facts and coordinating the legal process with counsel licensed in the jurisdiction where a case arises."

Pool drowning litigation can involve several areas of civil law depending on the location and circumstances of an incident. Potential issues can include premises liability, property maintenance, supervision, pool barriers, drain systems, equipment conditions, and compliance with applicable safety requirements. The presence of one or more of these factors does not by itself establish civil liability, and each matter requires review of the available evidence and governing law.

Aquatic Attorneys handles aquatic injury matters involving swimming pools, spas, water-related premises, and related facilities. The firm's pool drowning practice addresses incidents occurring at residential properties, hotels, apartment complexes, public facilities, recreational properties, and other locations where swimming pools or spas are present. Case assessment may include identifying the entities responsible for ownership, operation, maintenance, supervision, or equipment associated with the property.

Evidence in a pool drowning matter can come from several sources. Investigators and attorneys may review photographs, surveillance footage, incident reports, witness statements, inspection records, maintenance documents, property records, emergency response information, and available medical records. Depending on the circumstances, technical information concerning pool barriers, gates, drains, pumps, warning systems, or other equipment may also become relevant to the factual review.

Federal and state requirements can affect certain aspects of aquatic safety. The Virginia Graeme Baker Pool and Spa Safety Act, for example, establishes federal requirements addressing drain covers and entrapment hazards at certain public pools and spas. State and local rules may separately address barriers, gates, construction standards, inspections, supervision, or facility operations, making jurisdiction-specific review part of the legal analysis.

Colorado cases can also require examination of state civil law and any local requirements applicable to the property where an incident occurred. Aquatic Attorneys states that matters outside the jurisdiction in which its managing attorney is licensed are handled through appropriate admission procedures or in association with locally licensed counsel. The firm's website identifies Colorado among the jurisdictions where aquatic injury matters may be addressed through that model.

Michael Haggard serves as managing partner of The Haggard Law Firm and focuses part of his practice on pool drowning, wrongful death, premises liability, and aquatic injury litigation. He has been licensed to practice law in Florida since 1996, according to information published by the firm, and the firm's history dates to 1972. Aquatic Attorneys operates as a practice focused on water-related injury and death matters and provides information concerning multiple categories of aquatic incidents.

Pool drowning cases may involve claims concerning individuals, businesses, property owners, property managers, contractors, equipment companies, or other parties, depending on the evidence. Legal review generally addresses whether a duty existed, whether applicable conduct or conditions departed from that duty, whether the departure caused or contributed to an injury or death, and what damages are recognized under the governing law. Those questions depend on the specific facts of each incident rather than the occurrence of a drowning alone.

The firm's Colorado information also addresses aquatic injury matters beyond swimming pool incidents, including spa events, suction entrapment, and wrongful death claims connected with water-related environments. This information is intended to describe the categories of legal and factual issues that can arise rather than to state that a particular incident establishes a claim.

Aquatic Attorneys maintains online materials concerning aquatic injury litigation, drowning-related legal issues, and its multi-state counsel structure. For additional information about the firm's Colorado resources and jurisdictional disclosures, interested parties may visit website.
