

Arizona Painting Company Prepares Exterior Crews for Fall Repaints

October 15, 2026

Scottsdale, Arizona - October 15, 2026 -
Arizona Painting Company is preparing its exterior painting crews in Tucson for the fall repair and repaint season, when homes across Southern Arizona show the wear left behind by summer heat, intense sun and monsoon storms. The fall window also gives homeowners time to have exterior repairs finished before hosting family and guests over the holidays.

Arizona Painting Company provides exterior painting for homeowners across Tucson, with crews working throughout the surrounding Oro Valley, Marana, Catalina Foothills and Vail communities. Exterior projects cover stucco walls, masonry and cinder-block walls, trim and garage doors. The company carries out this work under license #251484 from the Arizona Registrar of Contractors, is bonded and insured, and holds an A+ rating from the Better Business Bureau. It has been serving Arizona homeowners for 25 years across the Valley and Southern Arizona.

The summer monsoon brings wind-driven rain, blowing dust and sharp swings in humidity on top of months of high heat and strong ultraviolet exposure. Because the monsoon returns every summer, the same pattern of wear repeats on homes from one year to the next. By fall, that combination commonly shows up on exteriors as hairline cracks in stucco, peeling paint on trim, water staining and faded finishes on the walls that take the most direct sun. Visible paint failure that homeowners want to address before it worsens is a common reason exterior projects begin.

"Every fall our crews see the same thing after the monsoon: hairline cracks in the stucco, trim that has started to peel, and walls that have taken a beating from the sun," said Doug Caris, CEO of Arizona Painting Company. "Fresh paint over a storm-stressed surface won't last, so the work starts with cleaning, repairing cracks and priming before any color goes on. Fall is the season we get our Southern Arizona exterior crews ready for, because that's when homeowners want their homes looking right before guests arrive."

Each exterior project is run by an on-site foreman, with a manager inspection during the job and a final foreman inspection at completion. The company sets out each stage of its exterior painting process on its website.

Preparation is matched to the surface and to the damage the summer has left behind. On stucco walls, crews clean away dust carried in by monsoon winds and repair hairline cracks before priming, while peeling paint on trim and garage doors is scraped back to a sound edge before new coats go on. Sun-faded walls are cleaned and primed so the finish coats go on evenly.

Repairs can extend beyond the house itself. Masonry and cinder-block perimeter walls, fences and gates, and garage doors face the same sun and storm exposure, and crews prepare and repaint these surfaces within the same project where homeowners choose to include them. For homes within a homeowners association, the company's color consulting service helps owners select exterior colors that fit association guidelines before work begins. Owners repainting after summer damage can use the same project to refresh or change their exterior color scheme within those guidelines.

"Homeowners get a warranty on the workmanship and a touch-up kit to keep at the house, so small marks down the road are easy to take care of," Caris said. "We'd rather fix the cracks properly in the fall than see the same problem come back the next summer."

Each fall, the company's exterior crews in Tucson concentrate on repairing and repainting homes worn by the summer, so properties are sound and freshly finished heading into the holiday season. Customers have given Arizona Painting Company thousands of five-star reviews across its Arizona offices, more than 2,000 in total. Seasonal project updates from its crews are posted on the company's Facebook page, and further
