

Dream Dogs Introduces Residential Board and Train Program for Dogs

October 08, 2026

BERMUDA DUNES, CA - October 08, 2026 -

Dream Dogs has announced the introduction of its board and train program, expanding the company's dog training services in Bermuda Dunes and the surrounding Coachella Valley. The residential training option gives dogs an opportunity to receive structured instruction while staying in a supervised setting. The announcement adds a residential format to Dream Dogs' existing range of training and enrichment services, including board and train in Bermuda Dunes, CA.

The board and train program is designed around a period of concentrated daily training. According to Dream Dogs, residential programs typically last two to three weeks, during which dogs remain in a structured environment while receiving ongoing guidance. The format differs from training models in which instruction takes place only during scheduled classes or private sessions. By combining daily routines with training activities, the program creates opportunities to reinforce skills throughout a dog's stay.

Dream Dogs states that its training services use science-based methods and positive reinforcement techniques. The company does not use fear or intimidation as part of its training approach. The residential setting allows training activities to take place consistently across the program, with instruction focused on behavior, communication, and foundational obedience. Specific training plans can be adjusted according to the dog and the skills being addressed.

The announcement reflects Dream Dogs? broader service offerings in the Bermuda Dunes area. The company provides day training, private in-home training, group classes, enrichment daycare, agility training, and puppy programs in addition to residential board and train services. This range of options allows training to be delivered through different formats, depending on the structure of the program. The company has been serving dogs in the area since 1996 and reports more than three decades of experience.

A central element of the residential program is the opportunity for dogs to receive repeated instruction within a consistent daily routine. Rather than limiting training to a single appointment, the board and train format provides multiple sessions during the dog?s stay. This can include work on basic obedience, behavior, leash skills, communication, and other established training goals. The emphasis remains on clear instruction and positive reinforcement rather than punitive techniques.

Dream Dogs? approach also includes an induction process for dogs entering its boarding programs. The company describes induction as an opportunity to learn more about a dog?s behavior, preferences, reactions, and comfort around different activities, people, and other dogs. This information can help inform how the dog?s care and activities are organized during a stay. Such an assessment-based approach provides context for the training process without relying on a single standardized routine for every dog.

The launch of the program comes as dog owners continue to explore different approaches to training and pet care. Residential training is one of several established formats available within the broader dog training industry, alongside group instruction, private lessons, and day training. Dream Dogs? announcement places the board and train format within its existing service structure rather than presenting it as a replacement for other training methods.

The program is part of Dream Dogs? ongoing presence in Bermuda Dunes and the Coachella Valley. The company?s website identifies Bermuda Dunes as its service area and notes that its offerings extend throughout the surrounding region. Its residential programs provide a setting where training and daily care occur during the same stay, while its other services allow instruction to take place in group, private, or daytime settings.

Dream Dogs has identified positive reinforcement as the foundation of its training philosophy. This approach focuses on reinforcing desired behaviors and establishing clear communication during instruction. Within the board and train setting, the same general training principles can be applied throughout a dog?s stay, helping maintain consistency between individual sessions and daily activities.

The announcement adds another residential option to the company's established dog training services in Bermuda Dunes. As the program continues, Dream Dogs will provide board and train services alongside its existing classes, private lessons, day training, enrichment daycare, and other canine programs. The company's website identifies the residential option as a two- to three-week program conducted in a structured environment, giving the service a defined place within its broader training offerings.

With the introduction of board and train in Bermuda Dunes, CA, Dream Dogs is expanding the ways its training services can be delivered through a residential format. The program combines temporary boarding with concentrated daily instruction while maintaining the company's stated use of positive reinforcement and science-based methods. The announcement marks an expansion of Dream Dogs' service lineup in the Coachella Valley.
