

Parent Your Parents Highlights Senior Home Care Planning Considerations for Families in Aventura and South Florida

October 13, 2026

KEY BISCAVNE, FL - October 13, 2026 -

Key Biscayne, FL ? Parent Your Parents is highlighting senior home care planning considerations for families in Aventura and South Florida as they navigate long-term care decisions and changing health needs for aging loved ones.

The practice, led by attorney H. Frances Reaves, Esq., provides elder law, estate planning, Medicaid planning, and care-navigation support to families in South Florida. It does not provide direct non-medical or home health caregiving services.

For many adult children, planning begins with an urgent concern, such as a hospitalization, discharge from rehabilitation, an assisted-living transition, or increasing difficulty managing safely at home. Families may need to understand who has legal authority to act, what documents are in place, whether a care setting is appropriate, and how care may be funded. Parent Your Parents helps families address these connected decisions through coordinated legal and care-focused preparation.

Parent Your Parents? legal and care-navigation planning for senior home care involves more than choosing a provider or arranging daily support. It can include reviewing durable powers of attorney, health care surrogate designations, living wills, trusts, wills, and other estate-planning documents. It can also involve evaluating how Florida Medicaid rules may apply when nursing-home care, in-home support, or assisted-living services become part of a family?s planning needs.

Parent Your Parents combines these conversations rather than treating them as separate legal and practical tasks. The practice helps families understand the legal documents, care options, and Florida-specific rules that may affect their next decisions.

The firm?s planning work includes guidance related to wills, revocable and irrevocable trusts, durable powers of attorney, health care surrogate designations, living wills, special-needs trusts, enhanced life estate deeds, probate matters, and trust administration. Durable powers of attorney and health care surrogate designations can be especially important when children need legal authority to assist with financial or health-care decisions on behalf of a parent.

The practice also addresses Florida Medicaid planning for families considering long-term-care options. Depending on the situation, this can include reviewing potential eligibility for Florida?s Institutional Care Program, which may help eligible individuals in nursing facilities pay for care and other covered medical services.

Planning is not limited to families facing a crisis. Early planning may allow time to identify decision-makers, organize records, evaluate care preferences, and consider how estate and Medicaid strategies fit together. The practice also recognizes that many families seek guidance only after an immediate care event has occurred.

Care-navigation support is another part of the firm?s approach. This can include guidance on facility-related considerations, coordination around discharge-planning conversations, family discussions, and updates as a parent?s circumstances or relevant rules change. The purpose is not to replace medical providers or care facilities, but to help families understand the legal and planning issues that may shape their choices.

Reaves guides elders and their families through estate, Medicaid, and long-term-care planning matters. Her work centers on translating complex legal and benefits-related information into practical next steps for families managing aging-related transitions.
