Green & Associates Expands Family Law Services With New Divorce Mediation Offering

October 13, 2026

EAST BRUNSWICK, NJ - October 13, 2026 -
Green & Associates has announced the expansion of its family law services to include divorce mediation for individuals and families in East Brunswick, New Jersey. Led by Jonathan Green, the firm's mediation services provide couples with an alternative to traditional divorce litigation, offering a process focused on communication, negotiation, and mutually acceptable agreements.

Divorce mediation allows separating couples to work toward resolving important matters with the assistance of a neutral mediator. Rather than relying exclusively on courtroom proceedings, participants can discuss their concerns and explore potential solutions in a structured setting. The process may address property division, child custody, parenting arrangements, and financial support, depending on the circumstances of each case.

The introduction of divorce mediation in East Brunswick, NJ reflects Green & Associates' focus on providing additional options for families dealing with separation. Mediation gives participants an opportunity to communicate their priorities and work toward agreements that address their individual circumstances. Although the process does not eliminate every disagreement, it can provide a framework for discussing difficult issues outside a contested court proceeding.

Jonathan Green works with clients to help them understand the mediation process and identify the issues that require resolution. Sessions can provide an opportunity for both parties to explain their concerns, exchange relevant information, and consider possible arrangements for the future. The mediator's role is to facilitate discussions and help participants evaluate potential solutions rather than make decisions on their behalf.

The issues addressed during divorce mediation vary according to each couple's needs. Property division may involve discussing shared assets, financial accounts, and outstanding obligations. Parents may also need to establish parenting schedules, determine how major decisions will be made for their children, and develop arrangements for child support. Addressing these matters through organized discussions can help participants understand their options before finalizing an agreement.

Mediation may also offer practical advantages for couples seeking to manage the financial and personal demands of divorce. Litigation can involve court appearances, formal filings, and extended negotiations, depending on the complexity of a case. Mediation provides another route for discussing disputed matters, although the time and expense involved will depend on the level of disagreement, the issues being addressed, and whether additional legal proceedings become necessary.

For families with children, the mediation process can create an opportunity to discuss parenting responsibilities and future communication. Developing workable arrangements may help parents establish expectations for shared responsibilities after separation. However, mediation is not appropriate for every situation, particularly when safety concerns, coercion, or significant power imbalances prevent meaningful participation. Individual circumstances should be considered when determining whether mediation is a suitable option.

Green & Associates is also providing educational information to help individuals better understand the divorce mediation process. A blog published on the firm's website discusses the role of a mediator, the types of issues commonly addressed during sessions, and ways participants can prepare for discussions. The resource is intended to give readers an introduction to mediation and help them identify questions to consider when evaluating their options.

Preparation can play an important role in productive mediation sessions. Participants may benefit from gathering relevant financial records, identifying their priorities, and considering practical arrangements for their post-divorce lives. Understanding which issues require agreement can also help keep discussions focused. When necessary, individuals can consult independent legal counsel to understand their rights and review proposed agreements before signing.

Through its expanded services, Green & Associates aims to make mediation available as an additional option for individuals considering divorce. The firm's divorce mediation in East Brunswick, NJ services are designed to support structured discussions about the legal, financial, and family-related matters that often arise during separation.

Individuals interested in learning more about the mediation process can visit the Green & Associates website or contact the firm's East Brunswick office for additional information. The firm continues to provide information about available family law services to help individuals understand the options that may be appropriate for their circumstances.
