

Campbell RV Offers Guidance on RV Winterization

October 13, 2026

SARASOTA, FL - October 13, 2026 -

Campbell RV is reminding recreational vehicle owners about the importance of RV seasonal maintenance as cooler weather approaches. The family-owned dealership continues to provide winterization and summerization services as part of its full-service operations for motorhomes, travel trailers, fifth wheels, and other units.

The service center, which opened in 2000, handles chassis work, engine and driveline repairs, body and collision work, roof repairs, and leak detection. Technicians are factory-trained and RVDA certified. The facility is a Florida RV Trade Association Certified RV Service Center and provides authorized warranty service for major RV appliances as well as brands including Workhorse, Ford, Cummins/Onan, and Forest River. Maintenance packages are available for both gas and diesel motorhomes, covering fluid checks, oil and filter changes, lubrication, battery and charging system inspections, tire pressure verification, and roof inspections.

"Winterization helps protect plumbing, appliances, and systems from damage when a unit is stored or operated in colder conditions," said Kevin Campbell, Owner of Campbell RV. "The process varies by the type of recreational vehicle, so technicians evaluate each unit individually before proceeding with any work."

The dealership lists RV winterization and RV summerization among its service offerings. Additional work includes battery service, air conditioning and heating repairs, generator maintenance, and water damage restoration. Some technicians specialize in roofing and structural repair for leaks. A free roof inspection is included with service estimates. Parts and accessories are available to support both shop work and owner maintenance.

Campbell RV sells new and pre-owned recreational vehicles from manufacturers including Forest River. Inventory includes Class A, Class C, and Class B motorhomes along with fifth wheels, travel trailers, destination trailers, pop-up campers, and toy haulers. The company became a Forest River dealer in 2010 after beginning new RV sales in 2005. Consignment services handle marketing, test drives, and paperwork for owners who wish to sell a unit. Financing options are arranged through multiple lenders for buyers who choose that route.

Campbell added, "Owners who plan to travel to cooler regions or store their vehicle for a period often schedule this service ahead of the season so that systems remain ready for later use."

The business traces its regional activity to earlier family automotive operations. Kevin Campbell began selling motorhomes and travel trailers in the early 1990s. Family members had worked in vehicle sales and service in the Sarasota area for decades before the focus shifted to recreational vehicles. The current offices and showroom have been in use since 2015. Kevin and Wanda Campbell lead the family-owned operation.

Customer comments on the dealership's review page describe staff who walk buyers through systems after a purchase and coordinate repairs. Those accounts focus on process and follow-through. Combined with seasonal service offerings, they illustrate how maintenance, inspection, and ownership support can occur in sequence for both long-time owners and those moving into a recreational vehicle for the first time.

As temperatures drop in many regions, recreational vehicle owners often review storage plans, travel itineraries, and system readiness. Campbell RV's service capabilities address those practical needs through scheduled work and responsive repairs. The dealership's multi-department structure supports sales, service, parts, and consignment within a single location serving the broader recreational vehicle community.

Campbell RV positions seasonal maintenance as an operational function alongside its other activities. The company reports that technicians handle winterization as one element of keeping units functional across different climates and usage patterns. That work, together with inventory selection and ongoing service support, forms part of the ownership cycle described on the company's site.
