

Byerly RV Highlights Fall as Distinct Season for RV Travel and Rentals

October 13, 2026

TROY, MO - October 13, 2026 -

Byerly RV is highlighting fall as a distinct period for RV rentals and travel. Cooler daytime temperatures, shorter daylight hours, and reduced demand at many campgrounds create operating conditions that differ from peak summer months. These differences affect heating system use, water-line management, and route timing for both owners and renters.

Overnight lows in October and November can require more frequent furnace operation and closer attention to plumbing than is typical in midsummer. Units that remain in use during this window may need different battery and propane checks than those performed earlier in the season. Rental units available through the dealership include motorhomes and travel trailers that can be used for shorter fall outings. Owners who plan limited travel before moving units into storage may schedule those trips during the same period.

Warren Patton, President and Owner of Byerly RV, said, "October and November bring different conditions for both owners and renters. Cooler days change how systems are used and how routes are planned compared with midsummer travel. The same unit may need more attention to heating and moisture management than it did a few weeks earlier."

Byerly RV University offers monthly sessions that cover systems operation, maintenance intervals, and seasonal preparation. A Winter Readiness Workshop is scheduled for October 15 as part of that series. The session addresses plumbing protection and temperature-related steps that become relevant as overnight temperatures decline. Service staff at the dealership perform related inspections that include heating systems, seals, batteries, and running gear. The service department operates a 16-bay facility along with a separate body shop for collision and chassis work.

Climate-controlled indoor storage and outdoor storage options are available for units that will remain stationary. The indoor facility maintains a temperature range that reduces freeze risk for plumbing and other systems, helping to protect the integrity of your unit. Owners who opt for outdoor storage should continue to follow standard winterization steps for water lines and tanks to ensure functionality. The dealership services units, regardless of their purchase location, providing necessary maintenance for all customers consistently.

Fall travel involves adjustments that are less common in summer. Shorter daylight limits the practical driving window for some routes, and heating systems increase electrical demand. Site availability at many parks can be higher than in July or August because overall demand is lower. The Priority RV Network includes more than 180 participating dealerships. Byerly RV is the only Missouri member of the network. Network locations provide service access for owners traveling outside the immediate area.

The annual Christmas Lights Tour is a separate community event held one weekend during the holiday season at Jellystone Park. The tour focuses on customer participation in a seasonal light display and is distinct from fall travel activity. Fall outings and the later holiday gathering occupy different parts of the calendar.

Byerly RV was established in 1948 and remains a third-generation family-owned dealership. The Patton family has guided the company from its origins as a travel trailer manufacturer to its current operations in sales, service, parts, rentals, and storage. The dealership has received multiple Top 50 Dealer Awards in North America. Educational sessions and service capacity address the practical requirements of ownership as temperatures decline and travel patterns shift from summer peak to the fall transition period. Storage options further support units that move from active use into stationary periods.
