October 13, 2026 -

Big League Turf & Landscape has announced the addition of patio cover services to its existing landscaping offerings. The new service provides residential and commercial property owners with another option for incorporating shade structures into outdoor spaces, with designs intended to accommodate the considerations of Arizona's desert climate.

Phoenix's sunny conditions allow residents to use their outdoor spaces throughout much of the year, but prolonged sun exposure and high summer temperatures can affect how patios and other exterior areas are used. Patio covers can provide shade over seating areas, outdoor dining spaces, and other parts of a property. Their placement and design can also influence how outdoor areas connect with the surrounding landscape and existing structures.

The introduction of patio covers in Phoenix, AZ expands the company's range of outdoor improvement services. Property owners considering a patio cover can evaluate factors such as available space, architectural style, material options, and intended use when planning a project. These considerations help determine how a structure may fit within an existing landscape and support the property's functional requirements.

Patio covers can serve several purposes depending on their configuration and placement. A covered patio may provide a designated area for relaxing, dining, or gathering with family and guests while reducing direct sunlight on the space below. The structure's design, dimensions, and materials can affect its appearance, maintenance requirements, and suitability for local weather conditions.

Big League Turf & Landscape's expansion reflects the practical considerations involved in planning outdoor environments in warm climates. Property owners evaluating shade structures may need to consider exposure to sunlight, seasonal weather, and the relationship between covered and uncovered areas. Material durability and appropriate installation methods are also relevant when selecting an outdoor structure intended for continued use.

A company spokesperson explained that the addition responds to homeowners seeking additional ways to use their outdoor spaces. The spokesperson noted that patio covers can combine practical shade with design elements that complement existing patios and landscaping. The service gives property owners another option to consider when planning improvements around their outdoor living areas.

The new offering is also relevant to commercial properties with outdoor areas intended for customers, employees, or visitors. Depending on the property's layout and intended use, covered spaces may provide additional opportunities for outdoor seating or other activities. Commercial applications require consideration of the structure's dimensions, placement, accessibility, and compatibility with the surrounding building and landscape.

For residential and commercial projects alike, planning remains an important part of the installation process. Property owners may need to review local building codes, permit requirements, and applicable structural specifications before construction begins. Discussing these details during the planning stage can help clarify project requirements and identify considerations that may affect the installation schedule.

The availability of patio covers in Phoenix, AZ gives local property owners another option when assessing ways to improve the usability of their exterior spaces. The appropriate design will depend on individual project requirements, including the intended function of the covered area, the property's existing features, and the materials selected for construction.

Big League Turf & Landscape continues to provide landscaping services for properties in the Phoenix area. The addition of patio covers broadens its service portfolio and gives customers an opportunity to consider shade structures alongside other outdoor improvements.
