

Good Day Garage Doors Highlights Warning Signs of Failing Garage Door Springs for Knoxville Homeowners

October 16, 2026

KNOXVILLE, TN - October 16, 2026 -

Good Day Garage Doors, a family-owned garage door company based in Knoxville, Tennessee, has released new guidance focused on helping area homeowners recognize the early warning signs of broken and failing garage door springs. The guidance builds on the company's recent homeowner education efforts and addresses one of the most common and potentially hazardous issues found during garage door repair in Knoxville.

Garage door springs carry the weight of the door and endure significant strain with each opening and closing cycle. Over time, that strain leads to wear, and eventually to failure. According to the company, spring problems often develop gradually, giving attentive homeowners the chance to address them before a complete breakdown occurs.

The guidance outlines several warning signs that frequently indicate a spring issue. A door that has become difficult to lift, that opens only partially before stopping, or that moves unevenly as it travels along the track may be signaling trouble with its springs. Homeowners may also notice visible gaps, stretching, or separation in the spring itself, or a loud banging sound that can occur when a spring breaks. Any of these symptoms warrant prompt attention.

The company stresses that spring repair should be left to trained professionals. Garage door springs hold considerable tension, and attempts to repair or replace them without proper tools and experience can lead to serious injury. For that reason, Good Day Garage Doors spring repair services are carried out by technicians trained to handle the components safely.

"Springs are under an enormous amount of tension, and when they begin to fail, a door can become unpredictable," said Lior Hason of Good Day Garage Doors. "Recognizing the early signs, such as a door that struggles to lift or opens only part of the way, gives homeowners the opportunity to schedule service before the situation becomes dangerous."

The company noted that a door with a compromised spring places added strain on the opener and other hardware, which can lead to further damage if left unaddressed. A door that will not open or close properly also presents a safety and security concern for the household.

"The goal with this guidance is to help homeowners make informed decisions," Hason added. "When someone understands what a failing spring looks like, they can reach out at the right time rather than waiting until the door stops working entirely."

Good Day Garage Doors offers a range of services to Knoxville, Knox County, and surrounding East Tennessee communities, including garage door repair, emergency repair, installation, replacement, opener service, maintenance, and commercial repair. The company serves the region from five locations, with coverage extending to Maryville, Lenoir City, Pigeon Forge, and Oak Ridge.

Led by Lior Hason, Good Day Garage Doors is recognized for transparent pricing, prompt response times, and clear communication with homeowners. The company provides free estimates and continues to develop educational resources as part of its ongoing effort to support the local community.
