

SERVPRO of Allendale and Greater Holland Marks 27 Years of Local Restoration Service

October 22, 2026

GRAND HAVEN, MI - October 22, 2026 -

SERVPRO of Allendale and Greater Holland is marking 27 years of continuous local operations in West Ottawa County. The milestone follows a recent official company post on LinkedIn that recognized the anniversary of the franchise's service in the area. The company's LinkedIn profile identifies 1999 as its founding year, and the anniversary post framed the occasion in terms of sustained community relationships, customer trust, partnerships, and the contributions of team members. No formal anniversary event or specific calendar date beyond the year of founding appears in the company's official materials.

The local franchise has operated in West Ottawa County since 1999 as a locally owned and operated business. Its anniversary recognition presents the 27-year mark as a continuation of established local service rather than a change in structure or territory. Official sources document the franchise's ongoing work with residential and commercial properties affected by various forms of damage. The company's materials do not list a precise founding day or describe any public ceremony associated with the anniversary.

Over the course of its local history, the franchise has provided property restoration for residences and businesses. Official website information identifies services that address water damage, fire and smoke damage, storm effects, and mold. These categories reflect the documented scope of the company's restoration work. The range illustrates the types of property disruption the franchise has addressed while maintaining a local operating presence in West Ottawa County.

The company serves both residential and commercial properties. Official materials note work with facilities in education, healthcare, hospitality, restaurants, retail, government, property management, manufacturing, and other settings. A representative selection of these industries appears in company descriptions of its commercial work. The materials do not indicate that every listed industry has been served for the full duration of the franchise's local operations.

The franchise operates as a locally owned business within the broader SERVPRO network. Official website language describes the company as locally owned and operated while identifying the national organization as a source of training resources, equipment standards, and procedural frameworks. This structure allows the local franchise to apply established restoration methods while directing day-to-day operations toward properties in its documented service area. The relationship supplies organizational support without altering the local ownership of the franchise.

Trained technicians form a documented element of the company's operations. Official materials state that team members receive restoration training and hold IICRC-related certifications. These credentials support consistent application of industry procedures during water damage restoration, fire damage restoration, mold remediation, and related work. Coordinated roles among technicians, supervisors, and office personnel enable the franchise to manage assessment, mitigation, and follow-through on individual properties. Official sources do not provide staff counts or retention figures.

The recent LinkedIn anniversary post described the 27-year mark through the lens of customer trust, community relationships, partnerships, and staff contributions. The company presented these elements as the context for its local operations over time. The post did not include measured outcomes, project totals, or comparative claims. It positioned the anniversary as recognition of ongoing local work rather than an announcement of expansion or new services.

"Continued local operations allow the same team to develop familiarity with the properties and conditions that appear in this area," said Joshua A. Ingersoll, Owner of SERVPRO of Allendale and Greater Holland. "That continuity supports the delivery of local property restoration services in West Ottawa County by technicians who remain connected to the communities they serve."

The franchise's documented services respond to different categories of property disruption. Water damage restoration addresses intrusion from leaks, flooding, or pipe failures. Fire damage restoration includes smoke and soot removal along with structural considerations. Storm damage cleanup covers weather-related impacts, while mold remediation addresses growth that can follow moisture events. These categories appear as established service lines on the official website. They form the operational context in which the franchise has maintained its local presence since 1999.

“Team development and consistent local relationships have supported the franchise’s ability to handle varied restoration needs over time,” said Eric D. Chesser, Owner. “The anniversary recognition reflects the ongoing contribution of employees who apply trained procedures to residential and commercial properties in the area.”

The 27-year milestone records the franchise’s continuous local operations serving properties throughout West Ottawa County. Official materials establish 1999 as the founding year and document the company’s current range of restoration services for residential and commercial buildings. The anniversary post on LinkedIn presented the mark as recognition of community relationships and team contributions within that local framework. The franchise continues to operate as a locally owned restoration business within the wider SERVPRO network.
