

Hometown Builders Unlimited Named 2026 Festival Elite Sponsor

October 23, 2026

SLINGER, WI - October 23, 2026 -
Country in the Burg named Hometown Builders Unlimited an Elite Sponsor of its 2026 festival, held Aug. 28-29 at Cedar Creek Park in Cedarburg, Wisconsin. The organizer's announcement and sponsor roster connect the contractor to the event, and its sponsor logo links to the company's website.

The Cedarburg Chamber of Commerce listed the two-day program with gates opening in the late afternoon on each date. The chamber named Rodney Atkins, Josh Turner and Scotty McCreery for Friday, and Drake White, Mitchell Tenpenny and Brantley Gilbert for Saturday. Its event description framed the concert as a fundraiser for military, children's and other local charitable causes. The organizer's website separately names Mel's Charities, Children's Wisconsin and the Wounded Warrior Project as examples of organizations it seeks to support through the festival.

The event's sponsor page distinguishes Elite Sponsors from its title, stage, entrance, hospitality, gold and other sponsorship categories. The company website link appears in the Elite group, but neither the public roster nor the chamber's event listing gives an amount for the Hometown sponsorship, an attendance figure or a final donation total. The organizer also named Hometown Builders Unlimited as an Elite Sponsor of CITB 2026 in a separate public announcement on its Facebook account, confirming the year that the standing roster leaves unstated. Neither source describes a construction role, an on-site presentation or a project carried out for a beneficiary.

The event brought a two-day concert program to Cedar Creek Park, while the linked contractor website describes deck building in its home market and neighboring communities. That service-area description supplies context for the regional sponsorship without treating an event listing as evidence of completed construction in the festival's town. The company describes custom outdoor projects; the organizer's page records a sponsor tier, not a contract to build event facilities. These are distinct relationships with distinct public sources.

The organizer names Hometown Builders Unlimited in its 2026 sponsorship announcement, and the linked sponsor logo bears that name. Earlier releases have used the Hometown Deck Builders byline for the same website. The event record establishes a sponsorship, not a construction partnership or a direct relationship between the contractor and the charities the festival supports.

The festival did take place on the announced weekend, according to Aaron Shriver's first-person concert review for Melodies N' Memories. The account describes Friday sets by Rodney Atkins, Josh Turner and Scotty McCreery, followed by performances from Drake White, Mitchell Tenpenny and Brantley Gilbert on Saturday. It reports an onstage moment in which McCreery presented Turner with a commemorative music plaque. That independently observed program confirms the event occurred; the review does not document what any particular sponsor paid, supplied or did at the park.

The chamber described Country in the Burg as a gathering built around country performers and charitable fundraising. For a regional audience, the park venue and two-day schedule made the event accessible through a familiar local setting rather than a national touring stop. The announced performers drew on different generations of country music, with Friday and Saturday each featuring multiple acts; the festival's own website invited businesses to become sponsors and described that support as part of its effort to make a difference for nonprofit organizations. The public descriptions establish the stated aim, not a completed contribution by any particular sponsor.

Hometown Builders Unlimited's public website describes custom deck construction, design work and related outdoor-living services. Its service descriptions include deck installation and replacement, railings, lighting, porches and pergolas, while the website identifies the firm's home market and lists the festival's town among neighboring communities. The event sponsorship is a separate public record, maintained by the organizer, that connects the contractor to an identifiable gathering in that region. No client project or festival construction service is attributed to the company here.
